Fair Exchange?

By M. E. D. POUNTREY
(The Christian Science Monitor)

LONDON—As one who has been a reader of The Christian Science Monitor since 1912, I naturally have a great affection for the United States of America, and for the many good things which come out of it. Not least among these are its warmhearted, generous, and friendly citizens whom I meet from time to time over here in Britain.

Having met those warmhearted people, what next? To me, the enjoyment of their American way of speech.

The average Englishman of today shows, I am afraid, a native laziness in his use of his great heritage of spoken English. Conversation as it was once known, is a lost art. One blames the present forms of mass entertainment for this: films, wireless, and the watching of sport; none of which calls for more than silent acquiescence or at most vociferous shouting of a few phrases. But Even before this present era of "potted" entertainment, the English were lazy in their speech.

For emphasis, one or two overworked adjectives which happened to have caught on at the moment, were all that most people bothered to use. One remembers when "awful" and "awfully" seemed all one could say to emphasize any point whatsoever. Decades later, "definitely" was definitely the only emphatic word, and so on.

But from what I have heard and read, how different is the trans-Atlantic use of the language! America shows her vitality in an endless succession of apt, terse, witty phrases to fit a given situation. These hit the mark with an unerring precision which I find deeply satisfying: in addition they often include an attractive rhythm and balance in their actual wording. I must confess to an unconcealed delight, for example, in the whole family of phrases used to indicate slightly eccentric behavior of which "bats in the belfry" is, I suppose, the prototype.

And have I never a grumble at the American use of the English language? Well, I must confess to one, and that not a use, but an attitude of mind. I could dance with exasperation when I read or hear an American who says reproachfully, or even pityingly, of an Englishman, that he "speaks with an English accent!"

"Of course he does! It is his language, and he had it first!" I find myself longing to cry! But, dear America, if you will do it, I believe I have found the perfect comeback.

If you tell me I speak (American?) with an English accent, I shall reply by asking, do you know that baseball is an English game? By that I don't mean what we call "rounders." But BASEBALL—spelled just like that!

My authority? A gentle English woman who lived and wrote nearly 150 years ago. None other than our dear Jane Austen, who never traveled abroad or met many people but relations and friends in her own walk of life.

In her novel, "Northanger Abbey," written about 1815, you may find this ". . . it was not very wonderful that Catherine, who had by nature nothing heroic about her, should prefer cricket, baseball, riding on horseback and running about the country, at the age of fourteen, to books . . ."

When I read this I was startled at the word, "baseball." But I reminded myself that Jane had sailor brothers; that when she wrote there had recently been a war fought across the North Atlantic, and doubtless, the term had been brought back to her through some naval channel. However, my curiosity was aroused, so I turned to the Complete Oxford Dictionary. When did America first use the name? To my astonishment I discovered that this very sentence I had found in "Northanger Abbey" was the first listed use!

Then I turned to my encyclopedia for a history of the game. That tells me, "National sport of the U.S.A. . . . B. was first played in 1839 at Cooperstown, N. Y. . . . The 100th anniversary of B. was celebrated in Cooperstown in 1939. . . ." Those facts seem generally accepted in the United States; yet there was Jane Austen writing about the game some fifteen years before America had it!

Anyhow, there is my startling discovery, and you inquire, so what? Well, if America will be good, and never tell me I speak English with an English accent, but will allow me to maintain that she speaks it with an American accent—or, better still, speaks a charming derived language called American with a native accent, then I for my part will never give away the surprising fact that the American national game is an English one of the same name played with an American accent.

Is it a bargain? . . . Shake!

The belief that youth is the happiest time of life is founded on a fallacy. The happiest person is the person who thinks the most interesting thoughts, and we grow happier as we grow older.—William Lyon Phelps.

Rev. Habegger Shows Films of European Tour

The Rev. Edison Habegger will return to the Evangelical United Brethren Church in Eugene for a series of meetings starting Jan. 16. He has with him over two thousand (2000) feet of color film of the Holy Land, Africa, and the Mediterranean countries, where he recently travel contacting the missionary fields of his church.

Habegger comes with a wealth of colorful experiences. He was born of old-country Swiss parents. He was pastor of a large church in Chicago for six years and while there maintained two radio programs: "The Back to Home Hour" and "The Big Family Altar." He is now superintendent for the West coast for The Missionary Church Association, with his headquarters at Van Nuys, Calif.

He is noted also for his humor and Bible preaching on the common man's level.

"All Day In India"

The Willagillespie Baptist Church people will enjoy a "trip abroad" on Sunday as the entire day will be spent on the theme, "A Day in India." Dr. W. C. Osgood, who with his wife has served since 1928 in Bengal Orissa, India, will provide inspiration and guidance for the day's program. The emphasis will begin in the Sunday School and carry on through the evening service.

Dr. and Mrs. Osgood have had an interesting ministry for Christ in India, working in the leper colony, the missions schools, and as missionary evangelists, the major part of their ministry has been spent among the rural people of their mission area. The Osgoods are now home on furlough and are residing in Eugene.
