OSC Provides Building Plans

'How-to' for Most Farm Jobs on File

Want to build a water wheel? A merry-go-round? A manure pit? A nut drier? A hay stacker? A house or a barn?

Plans for these and many other projects are among more than 200 in the Oregon State College plan service, and available through the County Extension Service at the Public Market Bldg.

Each plan is drawn in such specific detail that even amateur carpenters can follow them, according to County Agricultural Agents O. S. Fletcher and W. B. Parker.

In nearly every instance the plans grew from a definite need. When college barns or other buildings were constructed, plans were adjusted for use on a smaller scale. Whenever demand was strong for such things as sheep dipping vats, feed mixers, milk houses, or other equipment, they were developed by the agricultural engineers of the OSC experiment station and the plans made available for public use.

Following the war, when there was a great need for more housing for farm labor, plans were developed for small, low-cost rural houses. These followed research by home economics and farm management workers so that features were included which farm laborers particularly wanted.

The first list of plans was published in 1936 by the extension service but as the project grew it was reorganized and placed under the direction of OSC agricultural engineers. All other such information was coordinated under this plan so that USDA bulletins on construction could be easily accessible. This eliminated unnecessary duplication and the service was made more complete.

Professor H. R. Sennard, agricultural engineer for the OSC experiment station, reports that county agents, home demonstration agents, and extension workers help many interested persons locate the building information they need, while others write directly to the college for plans. Oregon material, after thorough testing, is used in the plans. A small service charge is made to cover blueprinting costs.

THIS YEAR I'M PUTTING MY EXTRA CASH INTO SHARES OF A BUSINESS

I want some shares of stock to call my own. Want to see that it feels like to sign my name on the back of a dividend check. If that makes me a capitalist, it's fine with me!

I thought it over—and I'm not planning to sell out just because the price of my stock goes up or down 24 hours after I buy it. I'm just foolish enough to believe American business will grow stronger and not weaker in the years ahead.

You think I'm taking a risk? Sure! But so are the million people who own automobile stock. Or chemical stock. Or telephone stock.

This year many who think like that will buy stock for the first time. And that's wonderful. But remember this:

Don't buy stock with money you need for life insurance, mortgage payments, medical expenses, or emergencies. If you haven't saved money for necessities, it's too soon to buy stock.

Don't buy stock on a well-meaning friend's "tip." If you don't know the business record of a company, get the facts from a member firm of the New York Stock Exchange.

Don't buy if you can't afford to take the same sort of risk a man runs when he opens a corner store, a risk in the hope of a business profit.

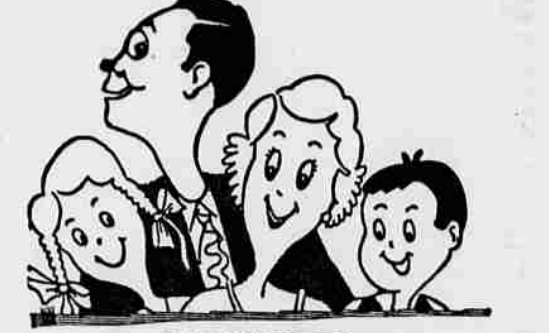

Member firms of the New York Stock Exchange invite your questions. You need no appointment. You can drop in or write them a letter for any information you need.
