The Problem of Morality

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat recently completed the publication of a highly significant series of articles on the problems of public morality. The publisher had written to a considerable number of men from different walks of life, asking each of them the same question: "What can be done to bring the nation back from the low standard of morals to which it has fallen?" Among the replies were many statements worthy of quotation and comment here.

Practically all of the men involved expressed themselves as being concerned over the seriousness of present conditions. This is a hopeful sign. Jesus once said, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick" (Matt. 9:12). The prelude to recovery must be awareness and admission that this nation is morally sick. No man who denies or is unaware that he is ill will seek the services of a doctor.

Bernard Baruch was one of the most outspoken at this point. His reply indicates his conviction that this country will be destroyed from within unless corruption in government and unethical conduct in other fields of endeavor in the United States are halted. He feels that this internal danger is even more serious than the possibility of any conquest by a foreign enemy. Baruch warns that "destruction is surely coming to this nation unless we stop doing the things that are not right."

Although we still print "In God We Trust" on our coins, to an alarming degree this nation is today living as if God did not exit and as if his moral law can be violated without penalty.

Proposed Remedies

As stated before, a significant group of national leaders, men from both industry and labor, from political life and various religious faiths, were asked to propose remedies for the present low moral ebb in the United States.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said, "I feel we must return to that reliance upon Divine Guidance which was such an essential part of the philosophy of the Founding Fathers." He also added, "We must repudiate the false, materialistic standards which are all too prevalent in our own society and which are epitomized by the atheistic ideology of communism."

Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, president of the University of California, analyzed the situation rather keenly and made some constructive suggestions. He pointed out "that we cannot change morals by passing more laws," and recommended that instead we have "concerted community efforts to increase church attendance by people of all faiths, with the voluntary assistance of all channels of mass communication."

He courageously laid his finger on a very sore spot when he called for "voluntary activities by the radio, television, and motion picture industries to reduce, if they cannot eliminate, the dramatizing of crime and amoral conduct in their programs, and to free themselves of the services of individuals whose private lives become a public scandal." And while he was at it, he directed toward our newspapers the suggestion that they "publish less sensational stories of crime and amoral conduct in their news columns."

A United States senator replied, "I think particular effort must be exerted by spiritual leaders and by our teachers to help young people reestablish a philosophy of life which will be satisfying and sound and purposeful and will lead to an inner emotional stability strong enough to weather external conflicts and pressures."

The president of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce showed good insight into the problem when he pointed out that "restraint by law or group action must be supported and augmented by personal restraint by our own conscience. The development of a moral conscience depends largely upon religious training, for morality without religion may be transient or even optional. . . . To fix the standards of morality we must have religion."

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, called the recent successive revelations of governmental corruption "disheartening and frightening," but indicated that "the hopeful aspect of the situation is that the great mass of our citizens are shocked. Our moral sense is not yet dulled to acquiescense in moral degeneration." He believes that "provisions for adequate teaching of moral principles in homes, schools, and churches will do more to fit men for holding public office than will legislation and punitive action."

William H. Ruffin, board chairman and past president of the National Association of Manufacturers, insisted that "we need revival of individual integrity and morality in the homes of America, in businesses, and professions. Such a revival will spark a surge of public indignation and action against the abandonment of the principles of personal and official conduct that, until a few years ago, were our great national pride and our great public asset."

A Few Comments

The replies to this question concerning public morality were much too extensive to give more than just an indication of their general tenor. As I read them over, I was impressed with the number of men who are aware that at bottom we are faced with a religious problem, not just a problem of lawmaking or political reshuffling.

From where I sit, we need a revival of "heartfelt" religion, the kind of religious revival that swept through England in the eighteenth century under the impact of the preaching of such men as John Wesley and George Whitefield.

—Harold L. Phillips, in The Gospel Trumpet (published in the interests of the Church of God).

SDA Visits 1000 Homes

Local Seventh-Day Adventists Saturday March 8 were to visit 1000 homes here as their part of a nation-wide one-day field program to call on 5,000,000 American homes to learn of physical and spiritual needs that can be alleviated by the church.

It is the first of two such campaigns slated for this year, in which an estimated 10,000,000 homes will be reached.

The program has a dual purpose. In prosperous sections of the cities supplies will be accepted for distribution to persons less favorably situated, leaders explain. In addition to the welfare phase, trained lay workers will be alert to give spiritual [help] where it is desired in case of sickness or other adverse circumstances.

"Churches tend to keep [too] much to themselves," Elder F. Bresee said in announcing the drive, "but Christianity is to cause people to go out into the 'highways and byways' and search for those who need the message of the church but hesitate to ask for it."

God is on the side of [every] whoever dreads punishment suffers it, and whoever deserves it dreads it.—Colton.
