

Woods Strike Standstill

Week-old strike of about 100 northwest CIO lumber workers was at a virtual standstill Monday morning, both on the part of the union and the industry. The union report made with employers the weekend, or as one union spokesman said Monday, "We heard a peep from anyone over the weekend." F. Hartung, president of the International Woodworkers of America, said no new meeting had been scheduled with the industry for the weekend, although a few independent operators have been signing up. Hartung calls "dangerous" most logging camps are picketed, he said. Union management spokesmen were unavailable for comment Monday morning.

Burglars Raid Office Building

Weekend burglars prowling through the Medical Center and the Medical Center and the Medical Center in downtown Eugene managed to show an effort for their efforts in the building but apparently got nothing of value in the other. Detectives Monday reported that entry was gained to two offices in each building and attempts were made to enter at least one office in each. The greatest portion of the loss taken in the Medical Center was from the office of Dr. M. Hilt on the sixth floor. The loss there was reported to be in currency. All of the office doors were attacked with small pry bars and blades instruments which were used to push back latches in door locks.

Scheduled to cost approximately $4,000,000, the project ultimately will provide four lanes for traffic and will eliminate all crossings at streets and railroads by use of grade separation structures. At the present time, construction is underway on the first two lanes of the bypass and on the various overpasses along the six-mile stretch.

Air Force Plane Makes Historic First Landing On Ice Cap On Top of the World

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — (AP) — An Air Force plane has made the first landing in history at the geographic North Pole.

The Alaska Air Command announced Sunday a big ski-wheeled C-47 landed Saturday on pack ice at the top of the world.

The party of Air Force officials and scientists spent three hours and 10 minutes on the ice pack. The plane was piloted on the historic flight by Lt. Col. William P. Benedict of Pasadena, Calif.

At the successful completion of the hazardous mission, Benedict messaged briefly: "Operation instructions carried out. No sweat."

Maj. Gen. William D. Old, head of the Alaska Air Command, announced the landing.

He said the plane took off from Fletcher's Ice Island, where an Air Force weather station was established the past March.

The plane made the 135 miles flight and landed on pack ice. There the party took various measurements, including ocean depth and gravity field strength. It then returned to the island.

Lt. Col. Joseph Fletcher of Shawnee, Okla., who established the post on the frigid floating island, made Saturday's polar flight as co-pilot.

Alaska Air Command officials said details of the North Pole landing were lacking because of uncertain radio communications with the ice island station.
