Home and Garden

Picture of 'Life on a Cloud'

AT HOME, ON TOP OF THE WORLD best describes this brand-new residence of the Maurice E. Myers family on Elk Drive, adjoining Hendricks Park. Architect Clare K. Hamlin built the house up to meet the crest of the hill, which became a secluded patio and the focal point of construction. The open-plan arrangement includes this outdoor area as an extension of the living area, and the high position of the house insures privacy — gives a wide and completely unobstructed view. Interior and exterior walls are both cedar. Photo in lower left shows lower level view of the Myers home from the front. It is an example of "reversed approach" in design — the height deliberately accented by vertical lines with no attempt to create a low, rambling appearance. Mrs. Myers can look over Eugene and far out into the valley from her convenient U-shaped kitchen shown below.

Popularity of Wall Paper Produces Wide Variety of Attractive Designs

By GAILE DUGAS
NEA Woman's Editor
NEW YORK—(NEA)—The present trend to more wall decoration, after years of stark, bare walls, brings wall paper sharply into focus once more. And in the 1952 wall paper trends, color is a high-light.

Deep tones are stressed in papers keyed to furnishings in every period. Small-scale scenic and toile types are shown for formal interiors while delicate Oriental motifs traced on backgrounds of celadon green, grey, honey beige or carbon black are meant expressly for the traditional home.

Provincial patterns have been smartened up this year. Those that simulate fabrics look especially right with provincial furniture and similarly, papers in calico and gingham designs provide a proper setting for Early American pieces. One Pennsylvania Dutch pattern that's both fresh and sophisticated has a chocolate background against which the traditional figures are sketched free-hand style.

Green Is Good Color For All-Aroundness

Green is a color it's well to consider when you're painting the walls of at least one room in your house. There are many attractive tints and tones of it now available. Green is soothing, restful—a nature color. It is cool, fresh and moist in quality. The hue seems to offer certain relief to the mind and hence to make time pass swiftly. Green tends to inspire patience. Psychological tests prove it to be the most tranquil of colors, neither exciting nor subduing. Being cool in nature, it also helps to overcome the physical discomforts of high temperatures. Primitive in its charms, it is universally liked.

The popularity of clean-lined modern furniture is on the increase. For it, there are geometrics and abstract designs in the new dark shades. These create a third-dimensional feeling. And for tailored types, papers have been done in modernistic architectural motifs.

Striped wall paper, the backbone of much home decorating for a good many years, has new life in designs with a decorative meaning. Sometimes, the stripes are varied in width to create a colonnade effect. Or, they're narrow as a pin and done up in the freshness of navy blue and white.

The textured look, so important papers, too. Sometimes it's a grain and woven surface with a tweedy appearance. With this look, there's color. Lots of it. Gold, silver and copper, increasingly popular, give these papers the Midas touch.

Quizzing The Gardener

Q—Is there a special way to grow the dwarf Salvia. I have a small greenhouse and I am new to the business of growing plants. My trouble is damping-off of the plants. I do not water after the sun is down and do not water on dull days unless the plants are extra dry.—D. G.

A—Damping-off of seedling plants is a common greenhouse disease. It can be prevented by sowing seed in a very sandy soil mixture sterilized by saturating it with boiling water or with formaldehyde and treating the seed with Arasan. Over-watering of the seed soil is a contributing cause. No fertilizer should be used in the soil until the seedlings are transplanted from the flats to pots or other flats.

'DEPENDABLE' is the word for BERKELEY WATER SYSTEMS

The only pump that stays primed if the water in the well draws down. The foot valve and admits air into the pump. No more fussing with bucket and funnel!

At the right is a cross-sectional view of Berkeley two stage systems. Circulation of water within these pumps—unlike any other design on the market—is covered by Berkeley patent. It is better in three ways: First, it assures maintenance of prime through positive jet action; second, it increases pump life by almost eliminating end thrust; third, it makes possible a shorter shaft and more compact construction.

The same basic pump is used for both deep and shallow wells. Conversion is easy—simply add the jet for deep well service. As a shallow well system, the pump has two separate outlets, high pressure for household, low pressure for flood irrigation.

Call us up for literature... or better, come in and check every feature of our floor models. You will like the hand-appearance, but more important, you will appreciate, as others do, their positive, year-round dependability.
