

Battleship A-Shell Being Developed

By DOUGLAS LARSEN
NEA Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON — (NEA) — A brand new type of A-bomb being added to America's fast growing arsenal of nuclear weapons.

The development brings the coast lines and key port cities of the world into easier range of America's atomic bombs in case of war.

The big advantage of the shell is that it can be fired from the big guns of battleships.

The development brings the coast lines and key port cities of the world into easier range of America's atomic bombs in case of war.

The significance of this latest development in nuclear weapons is that it will give U. S. forces a new type of potential in all-weather strikes from air, land and sea.

Details of the battleship atom-shell are top secret, as is the nature of its development and the type of target it should be particularly obvious that with the Army's announced development of a shell for a field piece, the Navy would be working on a projectile for its big guns.

Experts agree the development of an atomic shell from a battleship presents no more difficulties than the firing of one from an Army cannon.

The Army's atomic shell is a larger in diameter than 11 inches. The big guns of a battleship are 16 inches in diameter. This actually made the firing of an atomic shell for the Navy easier than the Army's job.

The size of the Army's shell is limited by ordinance factors. It is much bigger than 11 inches would have required a cannon large enough to transport. The Army's atomic shell is a larger in diameter than 11 inches. The big guns of a battleship are 16 inches in diameter. This actually made the firing of an atomic shell for the Navy easier than the Army's job.

The 16-INCH guns already mounted on battleships, it's possible that the Navy didn't even have to design a basically new weapon.

Based on the smaller size of the shell, it is obvious that the Navy's atomic shell would be a much easier to fit into a battleship's gun turret. It is also likely that the Navy's atomic shell can be fired from the battleship with no modifications to the turret or to the gun itself. That is, unless the Navy will increase the range of its gun drastically. It normally fires its projectile about 20 miles and with extreme accuracy. Experts see many uses for the new shell. It obviously enters the role of the battleship, which since World War I, has been fading in importance. There are four battleships in commission, the Missouri, the New York, the Iowa and the Wisconsin.

Mounting atomic shells, and strategically-placed around the world, the big battle wagons would be a constant threat to enemy shores and ports if a war were declared.

Bad weather would never be a hindrance to the battleship as it is to airplanes. And ship shelling is more accurate than bombing from a plane.

Other uses would be in the preparation for a Marine amphibious operation, or against enemy submarines.

A few atomic shells could accomplish as much as many hours of shelling by a whole fleet with heavy TNT. One atomic shell could wipe out a submarine pen could wipe it out neutralize it.

There is a top secret stamp on other plans for the use of an atomic shell by a battleship.

This development is being studied, the Navy is also busy studying two cruisers for use as missile ships and is working on a program to fit atomic shells in those guided missiles.

Blue Monday Just Too Much For Mill Worker

COOS BAY, Ore. — (P) — "If that song is played again, I'm going to jump out the window," said James Lee Moffatt, 25, a mill worker, at a resort north of here Sunday night.

The juke box song was "Blue Monday," which someone promptly played again.

Moffatt jumped, splashing into the waters of a lake 20 feet below.

It took surprised operators of the resort seven minutes to fish Moffatt out. By that time he was dead.
