On Labor Day

(From The Salvation Army Magazine, The War Cry)

Since 1882 there has been a day set aside in honor of the working man. Many states observed the day in the early 188's, but Colorado was the first state to proclaim, in 1887, that Labor Day should be a legal holiday.

From the beginning of creation, work has been a universal law of God. The stars have swung in their orbits, the tides have ebbed and flowed, the trees have brought forth leaf and bud and fruit.

God created Man to labor. Coal, oil, salt, gold and other minerals, He placed in the earth for man to dig. Nehemiah restored the walls of his city and was then directed to reform the worship of his countrymen. Noah was called out of the ark to work. Abraham was called from his country and Moses was lifted from the bullrushes to work.

Working with one's hands, creating instead of watching, has a therapeutic effect and is almost a mystical source of happiness and health. Our success in life depends on our being worthy of our vocation. Often we are slow to realize that God has chosen us for some kind of work.

Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "I look on that man as happy who, when there is a question of success, looks into his work for a reply, not into the market, not into opinion, not into patronage."

When counting your work vital, be sure you do not let this viewpoint lead you into belittling the work of others. They may be struggling against even greater odds than yours, handicapped by some inability that has not been among your deterents, bowed down by a vital need more urgent than yours. Honor the worth of their accomplishment as equal to, or surpassing, your own.

When our Lord came into the world, He came to work. He said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day." Our Lord regarded His work as something intrusted to Him by His Father. All of His works were done with "an eye single to God's glory." There was no self-seeking, no striving for effect, no desire for honor, no craving for applause; only the simple burning desire to save mankind and to do the will of God.

How patiently Jesus labored, and how unsparingly of Himself. As a boy He was in the Temple, about His heavenly Father's business. As a young man He was in the carpenter shop. In His public ministry, journeying throughout Galilee and Judea, constantly He went about doing good. He worked until so weary He fell asleep on the coping of the well. Another time from exhaustion and fatigue He fell asleep in a boat. He had little leisure even to eat. Every poor, sick and helpless creature turned to Him in sincerity and faith. When we do our work loyally, He lives in us more truly.

There is a patience of the mind that makes a man willing to do the job of the cluttered present so that the future hours, released from disorder, can give him freedom of the spirit.

Labor that exercises all our powers, that demands complete dedication, that relates itself to the whole of life, is a present part im our immortality.

Seldom is a man's achievements measured by his income. John Milton was paid exactly ninety dollars for his great poem, "Paradise Lost." A number of years ago two American prize-fighters were opponents in the ring for twenty minutes, and they divided a two million dollar purse. Were they twenty thousand times as successful as John Milton?

The benefits are two-way for a good worker. Not only does he give in full measure, but he too is the gainer. He develops his own latent powers and puts them to helpful use. This brings the satisfaction of fine and full self-expression. If you've read "Spoon River Anthology" you may remember Fiddler Jones and his poverty-stricken but remarkably happy career, written by E. L. Masters:

And if people find you can fiddle
Why, fiddle you must all your life . . .
And I never started to plow in my life
That someone did not stop in the road
And take me away to a dance or a picnic.
I ended up with a broken fiddle—
And a broken laugh, and a thousand memories,
And not a single regret.

Write To 'Em

(From The Church of God "Gospel Trumpet")

"Only the fellows who have been out there in the Armed Forces, a long way from home, know what it's like to go week after week without mail from the home congregation, from the pastor, and from friends they knew in civilian life."

The speaker, sitting across the desk in the editor's office, said these and many other things by way of unburdening himself concerning what he feels has been a serious, if not shameful, neglect on our part concerning our responsibilty for those in the services.

"Just as in civilian life," continued Dave Ryner (an ex-Navy man, now a minsterial student at A.C.T.S.), "men in the Armed Forces fall into two groups. Some are Christians, and some are not. We have a responsibility for both. The Christian fellows need to hear from the folks at home more often. They need better literature, especially the kind that stimulates Bible reading and Bible study. They also need the kind of literature that helps them to win their buddies to Christ. The unsaved men need materials that will give them something to think about. A fellow gets so hungry for something to read at times that he'll read anything that happens to be available. The fellow who is not a Christian also needs to be told about the Word of God and his responsibility to God for his life." . . .

"Whether we like to admit it or not," he said, "we have a military situation on our hands. For many years to come boys will be going into military service in increasing numbers. The fellows who go in have to learn an entirely new life, and they have to live under pressures they never experienced before. The church has a great opportunity to help these boys."

By the time Dave got through telling me about a specific case concerning a young man who was converted in one of our congregations, baptized by one of our ministers, but who during his entire military career received not a single mail contact from this congregation, my head was really down for shame.

But I was glad that I could tell Dave of some splendid examples of congregations, pastors, youth leaders, and fellowship groups who are really on their toes at this point.

Well, Dave, thank you for coming up to home plate to bat for your buddies. The only thing more we can say, right now, is that we will try to do better.

Civilian Workmen's Pastor Tells of Far North Career

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — The Rev. Knute Lee, chaplain to civilian construction workers far north of the Arctic Circle, finds his job has the same challenges, frustrations and problems common to most ministries.

Except, perhaps, that problems which beset isolated men in a cold, desolate and lonely place are of a wider variety and greater complexity.

Mr. Lee conducts his ministry from a hut chapel somewhere near the top of the world where weather-beaten construction workers are 'dozing a military base out of the rock and ice.

The 36-year-old "sky pilot"—a Navy flier in World War II and holder of the Navy Cross—writes about the problems to his brother, Bob Lee, director of "Sunday School at Home," for the Evangelical Lutheran Church with headquarters here.

"Counseling is a big part of my look at a efw of the problems: task," Chaplain Lee says. "Just Lester claimed that his foreman was hot-headed . . . Gil's wife wrote that she was afraid of Russian bombers . . . Hank's wife wrote that she didn't love him any more . . . Clem wants me to read his wife's letters because he can't concentrate . . . Steve's mother died . . . Bill's wife quit writing . . . Lob's wife started drinking again . . . Ike's baby is sick . . . Oscar doesn't like the food . . . Roy broke his glasses and their problems are never far be-

"Wherever men come together can't see. hind," the chaplain observes. "Men are here who have tried to run away from trouble, but they have found it to be a tenacious shadow."

Mr. Lee and the other two chaplains—a Baptist and a Roman Catholic—are at the base because the contractors feel the men will be more contented know is someone to turn to w sonal problems and for help.
