

Wildcat Is Listed As Top Fighter

WASHINGTON, D. C. — About the only animal, man included, who can "lick his weight in wildcats" is another wildcat. Pound for pound, the American wildcat, or bobcat (Lynx rufus) is probably as capable a fighter as there is in the animal world.

The bobcat is a distinct species, not to be confused with the larger cougar, or mountain lion, or with his Canadian cousin, the lynx, says the National Geographic Society. He is similar to the lynx in that he has the same short, or "bob" tail, but he is smaller, prefers warmer climates and his ears are not so markedly tufted.

This redoubtable scrapper is found in all parts of the United States—wherever there is sufficient cover such as forest, cut-over country, canebrakes, brushy bottomlands and the scrub growth of the west's arid canyons. Unmistakable bobcat sign has been found within 25 miles of downtown Manhattan, and there is not a state that does not harbor some of these animals.

NUMBER UNKNOWN

Because they live concealed lives and are seldom seen, no reliable estimate has ever been made of the number of wildcats in the United States. But experts agree they are on the increase.

The animal's secretiveness is not due to lack of courage, but rather to caution. Like many other fighters, bobcats are willing to let prudence take the place of valor when fighting is unnecessary. They will go to great lengths to avoid man, and will flee from dogs they can cut to ribbons.

This widely distributed predator is a silent hunter and usually makes little noise, but in a fight he will spit and snarl and scream. In the January and February mating season his courtship song has an astounding range, volume and variety.

LIVE ON SMALL GAME

A spring litter usually numbers from two to four. The kittens stay with the mother during the summer, learning the fine art of keeping alive. Frequently the litters remain together for their first winter, with each yearling cat going his solitary way the next spring.

Usual diet of bobcats is small game, such as rabbits and ground birds. Occasionally one will banish his fear of man and man's weapons to raid barnyards in search of domestic fowl. And he has been known to kill deer weighing as much as 200 pounds, leaping at the deer's throat and attempting to sever the jugular vein with a single slashing bite.

CURIOUS CATS

Typically feline, the bobcat is immensely curious, and will investigate almost anything in his four to five mile normal hunting range. Such articles as paper bags and candy-bar wrappings left by hunters or woodsmen often prove irresistible to the cats.

The usual weight of grown animals is 15 to 25 pounds, although some approach 40 pounds. They range from 32 to 42 inches in length and are 14 to 15 inches high at the shoulder.

The fur, which is spotted at birth, has a tendency to fade out with age. It varies in color with environment—from tawny tan in desert country to darker reddish brown in the forest.

Foote and family of six children recently moved into Monroe from Lancaster community and are living in trailerhouses Nos. 2 and 3 at Carson Ranch No. 3 just north of town for the present. Harbor Improvement Planned For Free Port of Tangier

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The free-wheeling, free-trading international city of Tangiers on North Africa's Atlantic coast plans to spend $4,500,000 on improvements of its crowded and inadequate harbor.

A postwar boom in population and construction makes better port facilities essential. Steel, lumber and cement for Tangier's building program must be imported. Present port facilities are largely taken up with already existing shipping — regular ocean-going freight and passenger service connecting with such ports as Marseille, Bordeaux, Casablanca and ports in Spain, notes the National Geographic Society. Hence, many cargoes must be lightered to shore until dock facilities are expanded.

OPEN CITY

The port also is busy because Tangier has no custom controls—only a 12½ per cent import tax. Almost anything can be brought in or shipped out of Tangier, regardless of import and export controls elsewhere.

In addition, the city is one of the few in the world where there are no currency regulations. Gold, a strictly governed commodity in most places, can be traded freely. American gold dollars, British gold sovereigns, and French coins of old issue are legally bought and sold, as are the paper currencies of the world.

The port of Tangier is a polyglot city of Arabs, Jews, Berbers, and Europeans — the center of the Tangier international zone with a population estimated at 172,000. The zone is about four times the area of the District of Columbia.

Strategically located on the northwestern shoulder of Spanish Morocco, the zone is less than 30 miles southwest of the Rock of Gibraltar. It enjoys a warm, dry climate similar to that of expansion. A national of almost any country can enter the city with little trouble, and he can remain as long as he likes. This freedom has resulted in an influx of refugees, as well as traders.

The refugees are of all varieties and political faiths. Some fled Hitler Germany; others left Germany after the Allied victory; some escaped the Iron Curtain, and some are members of unsuccessful revolts.

The law in Tangier is happily divided to take care of the different segments of the population. Americans are in a class by themselves. They are subject only to United States law, under treaties signed with the Sultan of Morocco early in the 19th century.

Station Jobs Won by Bidders

LOWELL — Successful bidders for section foreman jobs on the new SP tracks around Lookout Point Dam have been announced this week by the roadmaster's office, Oakridge. Two sections on the disbanded tracks north of the river have been abolished; Carter and Armet above Lowell. Carter also had train operator facilities.

Crate section went to Doug Bridge who moved from Carter; Minnow was assigned to Fred Herford, formerly of Natron section near Springfield. This leaves Natron up for bid. Trent section was bid by Ernest Lee of Oakridge who will move when a successor for his old post, an extra track gang, is chosen. The Armet foreman, Dayton Hart, was left without an assigned job. John Kollias will remain at Fall Creek on the old line as the track will be left that far to service Fall Creek Lumber Co. mill. Tracks from Fall Creek mill to Lowell will be left in until the Lookout Point Dam powerhouse is finished in '54. Fall Creek and Natron sections are now administered from Eugene district rather than Oakridge.

Operator jobs for Minnow station will be called for bid in about one week.
