Nalley's Completes Plant Expansion

Nalley's, Inc., Tacoma, Wash., Monday announced the completion of a storage plant addition at its Springfield potato chip manufacturing plant.

The new addition provides controlled temperature storage space for potatoes used in preparation of the chips shipped to all parts of Central and Southern Oregon and into California.

Addition to the plant doubles the floor space of the manufacturing area, and will assure Nalley's customers of top quality potato chips throughout the year, according to Kenneth Radabaugh, Springfield plant manager.

Springfield's plant was built in May of 1950. Since then, one other addition has been made, which included space and installation of a 12,000 gallon oil storage tank to contain cotton seed oil.

The plant contains fully automatic machinery for the manufacture of the potato chips. The potatoes, selected from special Northwest crops, go through the automatic peeler, then slices are washed in cold running water. This is done to remove excess starch.

According to Radabaugh, the Springfield plant turns out about 3,500 pounds of finished chips each day. That's with the aid of about 18 employes.

The chips are shipped out to distributors each day, some by Freightways truck. They leave Springfield in the evening and are in the stores the next morning, assuring customers the freshest supply of potato chips available, Radabaugh said.

Distributors served by the Springfield plant are in Salem, Medford, Redmond, Klamath Falls, Coos Bay, Eugene, Roseburg, Gold Beach and other towns.

The Springfield plant is the only Oregon Nalley branch outside of Portland. Main office is in Tacoma.

Designed by Western Engineering Co., Seattle, the new plant cost about $25,000. Barnhurst Bros. were the general contractors.
