Common Cattail

Source of 'Gold'

By OWEN J. CRUMB

Of the Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N. Y. (AP)—A Syracuse University research team says the common cattail that grows in swampy areas "is a potential gold mine" of raw material for industrial and scientific uses.

The scientists say its many possible uses range from tasty cookies to "cattail likker."

Dr. Ernest Reed, chairman of the university's plant science department, and Leland C. Marsh, primary investigator in the department's cattail research center, say they have turned up nearly a dozen uses for the "weed."

They say the root or rhizome can be eaten like a potato or ground into a flour. They did this and baked cookies.

The flour also could be used as a substitute for corn starch, fermented to produce ethyl alcohol or used for growing molds from which antibiotics are produced, the scientists report.

They say the stem has long been used in making rush furniture.

their potential value, it will be time enough to start harvesting them and turning over other land into swampy cattail farms."

Marsh says cattails also could be grown on firm ground to make harvesting easier.

And he suggests that if cattails come into their own the crop might reclaim some of the nation's submarginal lands. He says they enrich the land they grow on and that some of America's richest soil was created by decayed cattail stands.

Marsh is quick to point out that the uses he cites are not all new. In his research he has turned up information that:

Russia has been using the cattail as a source of food.

The French made ethyl alcohol from the stems.

And the Rumanians have used the cattail to refine a "people's whiskey."

Fire Gobbler

Uses Coals

Like Peanuts

NEW YORK (AP)—When the man in the cigar store ground out a cigaret on William Samadu Jackson's arm, he only wanted to see if it would hurt.

"It did," Samadu said. Thereupon he confessed that the lot of a fire-eater is not always a happy one.

"As long as I can concentrate, everything is all right," he said. "It's when people try to experiment on me that I suffer."

On the stage of the Palace Theater the African-born Samadu currently is swallowing burning tapers, massaging his body with torches and popping glowing coals into his mouth like so many sugar-plums.

This is all in a day's work, but real peril comes when he leaves the theater. Small boys chase him with burning matches. Girls poke him with cigarets. Hot rivets are tossed in his face.

June Haver

To Wed Actor

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Actress June Haver flashed a diamond engagement ring Monday and announced she and actor Fred MacMurray will marry "some time this summer."

She said she and MacMurray went shopping Friday for the solitaire diamond set in baguettes and he presented the ring to her formally Friday night over a dinner table.

MacMurray has been courting the song and dance star since shortly after she returned from a brief stay in a Kansas convent last summer where she had taken the vows to become a nun.

MacMurray's wife, Lillian, died a year ago after 22 years of marriage. Miss Haver entered the convent following the death of her fiancée, Dr. John Duzik. She previously had an unsuccessful marriage with musician Jimmie Zito.

Reports of the wedding began to leak out when it was revealed that family friends of the bride-to-be were giving her a lingerie shower on her birthday, June 10.

U.S. to Step Up

Arms for Turkey

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States agreed Saturday to step up military aid shipments to Turkey's 19-division army, bulwark of the NATO defense system in the Mediterranean area.

The decision was announced in a joint U.S.-Turkish communique issued at the conclusion of four days of talks between high U.S. officials and visiting Turkish Prime Minister Adnan Menderes.

The communique said the United States would speed up delivery of about 500 million dollars worth of military equipment previously promised to Turkey.

STARTED YOUNG

By the time he was 15 he was able to vary the fish and fruit diet with some hot dishes, such as a smoldering torch. He eventually learned to walk barefoot on hot coals, to thrust an arm into a roaring fire and to inhale and exhale flame.

Samadu went to England to study printing as a youth, and made a big hit at parties with his incendiary tricks. He soon abandoned his publishing ambitions and became a full-time entertainer.

Now in his mid-30's, Samadu has eaten fire throughout Europe, the Middle East and North Africa. His current engagement at the Palace is his American debut.

He finds it necessary to keep in top physical shape to preserve his asbestos-like qualities. He gets to bed early, doesn't drink, eats a high protein diet, concentrates whenever possible on beauty.

One other thing. He doesn't smoke.

No good fire-eater, he pointed out, "ever touches cigarets."
