EUGENE FIRE DEPARTMENT last week collected proof that hazardous electrical apparatus can cause damage. Here is an electric extension cord which they said was hung over nails on the wall of a room, from the plug-in to the bed. Damage to property was estimated at $100 when this cord short-circuited. They theorize that a part of the cord frayed and made contact eventually with the nails which caused the short. Firemen are making home inspections this month as part of an annual program of fire prevention and safety instruction.

Effective Discipline Delinquency Curb

WASHINGTON (AP)—A federal Children's Bureau report criticized as "unfair and ineffectual" this week what it called a growing trend to jail or fine parents for the delinquent acts of their children.

It urged effective discipline, and an end to the idea that the child's every whim should be satisfied.

"One thing is paramount, that we hold our children accountable of their acts," the report said, adding that a child should be given extra liberties only when he has demonstrated his right to them.

The report, "Parents and Delinquency," summarizes a discussion among psychiatrists, psychologists, sociologists and social workers who deal first hand with delinquents and their parents.

EXPERTS' REPORT
The experts were called together by the Children's Bureau of the Health, Education and Welfare Department, and their report is to be used at a conference here on curbing juvenile delinquency which Secretary Oveta Culp Hobby has set for June 28-30.

"Putting an absolute liability on parents for the delinquency of their children would be unfair and ineffectual and might even make matters worse," the report says.

Asserting children "should be held accountable for their acts," the Bureau's summary of the report said:

"To treat them otherwise would be to do them a disservice, since marriage, job, and family all will require accountability. To permit the indulgence of every whim is merely building the child up for a setback in the future.

"Parents must be clear and consistent in their discipline, and hold children accountable until they have demonstrated their right to increasing freedom.

'IN GOOD CONSCIENCE'

"We cannot, however, in good conscience, hold parents wholly responsible for delinquency as long as there are wars, or fathers are in the armed services or on night shifts and therefore are taken fathers, or when divorce is so frequent.

"Parents are also caught in the cross-currents when courts are delayed in hearing cases, when truancy is not considered a violation of probation, when social workers' case loads are so high that no effective follow-up is possible, when intake of guidance clinics is shut off, when admission to institutions for defective delinquents is delayed unduly, when resident centers for psychiatric care are practically nonexistent."

Helping parents to be more effective parents is a more constructive way of dealing with juvenile delinquency, the conference said.
