'Good Old Winnie'

By WARREN ROGERS JR.
Of The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — They came by the hundreds to have a look at him—perhaps the last—and he obliged with all the rugged grace of a mellowed old bulldog.

They cheered and applauded from the picket fence of the White House to the sleek lobby of the Hotel Statler to the austere gates of the British Embassy.

"Attaboy, Churchill!" they cried, forgetting his knight-hood, his 79 years and the decorum due the prime minister of Great Britain.

"Good old Winnie!" they called, remembering his American mother and his many visits—this was the ninth just since Pearl Harbor Day in 1941.

They cheered the man and the symbol—the living pink and white, brandy-nipping, cigar-chomping legend of British-American solidarity.

"I am quite certain," he told them at a luncheon news conference Monday "that half the evils of the world can be prevented by our going hand-in-hand together and, if necessary, standing shoulder to shoulder."

Sir Winston had ignored his cold meat and potato salad luncheon to prepare his replies to the written questions submitted. His shell glasses slipped halfway down his short nose, his lips pursed in concentration. He read the questions and sorted them in stacks in front of him.

As he worked through the questions, he quoted from a speech he had made years before in England. Quoting yourself, he confided, was a good idea. It not only saved you the trouble of making up something new—"also it shows what a far-sighted politician you are."

"I am not going to choose between Republicans and Democrats; I want the lot."

"Politicians who can't face unpopularity are really not worth having. They look like it for a time, but afterwards you will find that you have had much the worst of the deal."

There was general agreement that he had lost none of his power over words—nor his charm with people.

And he looked indestructible, but many watching him recalled he had already had two strokes and would be 80 next Dec. 3 and they kept asking themselves:

"Is this the last time?"
