Lane Reserves Park Areas

In a recent order, Lane County's commissioners set aside a total of 1,070 acres of county-owned land for future development into parks and recreational areas.

The lands will not necessarily be used for play purposes. The order was made to reserve them for possible recreational use and it will be for the Lane County Parks and Recreation Commission to determine their futures.

The areas include: 540 acres of sand dunes in the Florence-Glenada area; 15 1/2 acres at Camp Lane on the Siuslaw; five acres southeast of Eugene off the south Shasta Loop; 20 acres of gravel pit near Colin Kelly School; 21 acres at north end of Ferry St. bridge; 280 acres adjoining Blue Mt. School on Mosby Creek south of Cottage Grove; one acre on old Lower Camp Creek school site; quarter-section on old Fall Creek CCC camp; 18 acres McKenzie Community Park at Blue River; three acres Sandy's Plat on W. Irwin Way.

The order specified that the areas be designated as "park and recreational areas, to be set aside for such use forever, unless and until otherwise provided by law."

Fingerling Salmon Tough Customers

WALLA WALLA (AP)—Fingerling salmon are tough little customers that can go over certain spillways 180 feet high and through turbines in 100-foot dams without serious injury, says the Washington State Department of Fisheries.

Two biologists made their findings public in a research bulletin called "Investigations of Mortalities to Downstream Migrant Salmon at Two Dams on the Elwha River."

The findings of the pair, Dale E. Schoeneman and Charles C. Junge Jr., will have an important effect on design of power dams in the Pacific Northwest. A controversy has raged for decades over possible high mortality to fingerlings in their downstream migration over spillways and through turbines.

Marked fingerlings were released by the biologists at the spillways and turbines of the 200-foot Glines dam and the 100-foot Elwha dam. Both dams have turbines which turn about 225 or 300 revolutions per minute with blade clearance of about three inches. Larger dams on the main stem of the Columbia turn at much slower rates than at the Elwha river dams.

LADDERS PROVEN
 Army engineers say the success of fish ladders and elevators in getting salmon over dams has been demonstrated at Bonneville and McNary dams.

Schoeneman and Junge said no significant mortalities were noted at the Glines spillway, which has a free fall of 180 feet. At the Elwha spillway, 100 feet high, a pronounced Chinook mortality was found. The method of releasing and controlling the spilled water made the difference.

While small salmon showed they could go over a properly built and controlled spillway, 180 feet high, they had trouble when it came to turbines in such high structures. Greater pressures imposed on the fish were cited as the reason.

The biologists said the critical depth of water at which fish suffer mortalities lies somewhere between 100 and 200 feet.

Schoeneman and Junge also found that Chinook salmon fingerlings would search in deep water in order to get downstream if a surface exit at the dam was not available. Silver salmon fingerlings, however, would not explore
