Status Quo For 1955

By CYNTHIA LOWRY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Year's end being the traditional time for resolution, hindsight and prophecy — and prophecy being the easiest of these to handle — here with a few myopic glances at the clouded crystal concerning things to come in 1955:

The entire female population will continue to discuss Dior and the New Shape, but will continue to look pretty much the same — and a lot of them will wear their 1954 dresses, however reluctantly.

Men will continue to write about women, always with amused amazement, and women will continue to write about men, always as if they were little boys, and nobody will be fooled.

Premier Mendes — France ultimately will lose his temper when the 179th photographer shows a glass of milk in his hand for posing purposes.

More new drugs will come on the market, more radical surgery be developed, more wonder cures be touted — and the common cold and common hangover will continue to plague mankind.

Traffic will continue to get worse and in spite of all the campaigns and talk, too many people will be killed because of drunk or bad driving and stupid pedestrian habits.

Six fan magazines will be embarrassed because they run cozy stories of the happy married life of certain film stars a week after it has been announced that said stars have filed divorce proceedings.

Color television will be talked about but not seen much, but commercials on old-fashioned black-and-white will seem longer and duller than the 1954 batch.

A dozen or more outer-space enthusiasts who also love free newspaper space will predict that we'll soon be traveling to the moon, Mars or space platforms and a couple of convincing screwballs will report they've seen space ships from other planets land in remote sections of the American desert land.

Liberace will announce his engagement. Clark Gable will be rumored engaged on six separate occasions, less will be heard of Marilyn Monroe but more of Grahama Moses.

Eartha Kitt will be profiled by all magazines except Life National Geographic, someone will decide to remake "Gone with the Wind" as a musical, the Broadway stage will be described as a mortally stricken invalid, yet more plays than usual will be produced, the Mambo will join the Black Bottom in limbo, and high time.

Somebody will run faster than Roger Bannister, every winning horse will be compared with Native Dancer and there will be the same old Leo Durocher.

Mamie Eisenhower will buy three dozen handkerchiefs from a Washington store and go one will ever know about it.

Three Washington women with money will be described as successors to Perle Mesta.

Parents will be confused by conflicting advice by the experts and kids will continue to act the same.
