Growth in Social Consciousness

By F. STANLEY JONES

(From the book "Growing Spiritually" published by Abingdon-Cokesbury Press of New York and Nashville. Copyright. Released by NEA Service.)

We have been considering prayer as the outreach of man's spirit to God and man. We come now to consider growth in social consciousness.

The question of expanded social consciousness can best be raised by the question "Who is my neighbor?" This question was asked by a lawyer when Jesus approved of his answer that one must love God totally, and "Also your neighbor as yourself."

Growth, then, is a growth in our conception of "Who is my neighbor?" And an appreciation of and care for that neighbor.

And this is scientifically sound. For basically humanity is one, modified slightly by local environment and customs. A Westerner who has spent his life among the Japanese people and has made their life his own says: "There is no such thing as Japanese psychology—it is just human psychology." They are the same basically as other people—modified by a Japanese past and present culture.

A white teacher in a college in Africa said to me that he had taught students in Europe, and that these Africans have as good brain power as students in Europe. This was corroborated by a missionary who had taught in Africa and Japan.

Baha'i Talk Saturday Eve

Florence Mayberry, short story writer and president of the Santa Paula Calif. Business and Professional Women's Club, and member of the Board of Directors of the Campfire Girls, will speak in Eugene Saturday, Jan. 28, 8 p. m., at 1458 Alder St., home of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Jackson, under auspices of the local Baha'i Community.

Mrs. Mayberry, a member of Baha'i, makes many radio and TV appearances on the subject. Recently she spoke before the University of Washington general student body, and to the Foreign Student Exchange there.

Gordon Jackson, Baha'i World Faith teacher, who recently called for persons interested in Baha'i to meet, announces that a group has been formed to study Baha'i teachings, meeting each Wednesday at 7:30 p. m. until about 9, at his home, 1458 Alder St.

Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, both students at the University of Oregon, came here from California, where he became a member of Baha'i about 1880, and has been studying ever since.
