

NEW HABIT—R. S. Shrestha, left, and N. B. Basnyat, two of the eight educators from Nepal who are spending the summer at the University of Oregon, exchange ideas over a cup of coffee at the faculty club on the campus. Since coming to the United States, they and their colleagues have acquired the coffee break routine, switching from their native tea.

Nepalese Educators Arrive Here for Study

"Never saw anything like the way they can find a Chinese restaurant," said Hugh Wood, in describing his journey across the United States with eight Nepalese educators.

"We'd arrive in town and before I even knew where the hotel was, they had located a Chinese eating place."

These eight Nepalese were sent to Oregon under the university's contract with the Foreign Operations Administration. Their assignment to this university is to study school administration. After a year on this campus they will return to their native Nepal and take over the operation of the teacher training program set up under Oregon's guidance.

TWO YEARS IN NEPAL

They have come to the University of Oregon with Wood, a professor of education here and the man who has spent the past two years in Nepal planning and organizing the teacher training program. He will remain here during the year with the eight men while they learn of America's education of its teachers.

The eight are T. N. Uprait, deputy secretary of education for Nepal; K. R. Aryal, N. B. Basnyat, S. R. Dholi, M. L. Joshi, D. M. Shrestha, R. S. Shrestha, and R. P. Tandukar.

The group arrived in New York on May 1. Since that time they have visited colleges and universities, have seen the country's industries and scenic spots. They were amazed at Pittsburgh's huge steel plants. They saw the Ford plant in Detroit, the stockyards and packing plants of Chicago, the mines in Colorado. They viewed Niagara Falls (from the American side since they had only single-entry permits to this country), were awed by Grand Canyon, impressed by Boulder Dam, and amused by Hollywood.

They have seen so much in the past few weeks that they feel it will take them quite a spell of time to think it all through and sort out their ideas and impressions.

But having arrived on the campus, they have settled down to an opinion or two.

Opinion about the most interesting sight they saw across the United States—it was Boulder Dam. Because in this big power project they had a glimpse of the future of their own country. Right now Nepal is planning—still in the blue print stage—the giant Kosi Dam. It will be the highest dam in the world. The water power potential in Nepal, these men say, is tremendous.

Broken Truck Axle Results in Injury

A broken axle on a sawdust truck resulted in an accident Monday morning that damaged two other vehicles and slightly injured one of the drivers.

Donald Ray Buckner, 30, of 150 Edgewood Rd., driver of the truck, said the brakes failed when the rear axle snapped near the intersection of 11th Ave. and Polk St. The truck sideswiped a car and a pickup truck when Buckner swerved to avoid a direct collision.

Slightly injured in the accident was the car's driver, Mary Irene Eidson, 41, of Rt. 5, Eugene. She was treated by a physician for shoulder bruises. The pickup was driven by Robert F. Carpenter, 35, of Rt. 2, Eugene.

No citations were issued after the accident, which occurred about 11:15 a.m.

Lane to Seek Federal Funds

Health Facilities Would Get Money

Lane County Commissioners indicated Tuesday the county will make application shortly for federal funds to help finance new health department facilities when the new courthouse is constructed.

George M. Shiffer, director of hospital planning and construction for the Oregon State Board of Health, informed county officials Monday the county is eligible for Hill-Burton funds to pay upward of one-third the cost of health department equipment and facilities.

Shiffer explained that only the county health department section of the proposed courthouse would be eligible for federal assistance, not other county departments.

Dr. A. Triolo, county health officer who is working on a part-time status after a long illness, said the county must make application for the federal funds before July 1 to qualify for financial aid in the next 12 months.

Triolo estimated that the health department would require at least 5,000 square feet of space in the new building. He said the department's construction cost would be an estimated $125,000.

Shiffer stated the exact amount of funds Lane County might receive can't be figured until more detailed information is available. He estimated, however, the county could receive as much as $40,000 or more.

Lane County Commissioner Kenneth Nielsen, representing the Board of County Commissioners, requested Triolo to take steps to submit an application for federal fund to the state board of health.

Board Studies Bids From Fuel Suppliers

Dealers were offering to sell gasoline for 21 and 22 cents a gallon Monday night in Springfield, but the low prices didn't mean last winter's gasoline price war was being revived.

The offers were made in bids at a meeting of the Springfield School Board, which had invited suppliers to submit prices for furnishing gasoline to the system's school buses during the coming school year.

The prices didn't include gasoline taxes, from which schools are exempt.

Shell Oil Co. was awarded the contract for supplying gasoline after submitting low bids of 20.74 cents a gallon for regular and 23.49 cents a gallon for Ethyl. The company offered to trim another half-cent a gallon off the price when deliveries can be made by truck-trailers instead of smaller tank wagons.

SIX FIRMS

Bids from six gasoline companies were considered at the meeting. A seventh bidder, Standard Oil Co., was declared ineligible because the firm had failed to include a bond with its bid.

Seven contracting firms submitted bids for construction work at Camp Creek School, where a classroom addition has been authorized.

The association approved a resolution backing a budget proposal for the State Firemen's Vocational Training Program. The group plans to study the needs for fire training in various departments. Next year's OSFFA meeting will be held in Salem.

Group Favors Zoning Plan For Glenwood

About 40 persons turned out Monday night for a public hearing involving land use zoning of the Glenwood district east of Eugene.

Majority of those who attended apparently were in favor of a zoning plan proposed by Howard Buford, city-county planning consultant, and members of a special Glenwood citizens zoning committee.

The plan calls for zoning to restrict use of land to light industrial purposes, limited industrial, suburban residential development and agricultural uses.

Some persons objected to industrial zoning adjacent to their homes. Others, however, appeared in agreement with the tentative plans.

The area is now unzoned and any type of industry, business or home may be built in the Glenwood district.

Buford explained that "there is no protection now" for those in the district. Therefore, it is to the advantage of residents that a definite plan be agreed upon, he said.

It will be up to the County Planning Commission now to take action to zone the area. Objections or proposed changes may still be made to the commission.
