54 inches short of his world indoor mark. It was the eighth year in a row he has won the event.

Paul Winder of Morgan State captured the 60-yard dash in 6.2. Cary Weisger, Duke's Atlantic Coast Conference champion, captured the 1,000-yard run with a spurt in the last 50 yards that overcame Ed Moran of New York A.C. The time was 2:12.8. Weisger hit the tape about two yards ahead of Moran, who stumbled at the start.

Tom Murphy of the New York A.C. stepped into the lead on the first lap and held it all the way to win the 600 in 1:11.7. Kye Courtney of the Manhattan was trailing by a yard at the finish, but pressed by Josh Culbreth of the Philadelphia Pioneer Club, had to drop out in a heat. Bad feet, he said.

Phil Coleman of Chicago captured the mile as expected in 4:09, with Velisa Mugosa of the New York A.C. second about 30 yards back in second place.

Frank Sepos, a Hungarian expatriate from Santa Clara, Calif., took the one-mile walk in 6:27.4. Villanova won the mile relay in a close duel with Morgan State in 3:17.7 and the New York A.C. captured the two-mile relay in 7:46.2.

Don Bragg of Philadelphia won the pole vault with a 15-5 effort, a meet record.

The New York A.C. won the team crown for the third straight year scoring 24 points.

Winter Olympics Note Pad Differences Noted in Crowds; Russian Winner Shy Blonde

By JERRY UHRHAMMER

Of the Register-Guard

SQUAW VALLEY—A record was set here Saturday morning—but it probably will never be entered in the record books.

The 20,000 spectators who jammed the sunny slopes of K-122 peak to watch the ladies' downhill race are believed to be the largest crowd ever assembled in America to watch a ski race, which generally isn't considered much of a spectator attraction.

The spectators were everywhere. Most were gathered at the bottom of the slope near the finish gate, taking advantage of every conceivable vantage point. Additional thousands—though they didn't have skis—trudged uphill and lined the sides of the downhill course.

"It's wonderful that this many people are here," commented Dave Lawrence, coach of the U.S. Girls' Alpine team. But at the same time, he continued, the crowd was a far cry—in both size and enthusiasm—from what a similar race would draw in any European country. At the International Ski Federation championships in Badgastein, Austria, in 1958, for example, some 50,000 Austrians were there watching just one race, he said.

Lawrence, pointing to the crowds beginning to leave the hill quietly after the race, said: "They just don't know what they're watching. They don't even cheer. In Europe the enthusiasm is tremendous. They cheer every racer who comes through the finish gate."

Lawrence noted that the women racers were still inside the fence-enclosed finish area, talking to a few newsmen, as the crowd left. "That's not the way it would be done in Europe," Lawrence continued. "You couldn't keep the people out of there. They'd have the fence torn down and would be parading the skiers around on their shoulders, no matter what country the winner was from. The winner would never be able to just walk away."

Trying to interview the winners after a ladies' downhill race is chaotic, especially in the Olympics when racers and newsmen are communicating in several different languages.

Penny Pitou, who won the second place silver medal for the U.S., can cope with almost any of the American or European newsmen, however. She is extremely fluent in French and German. In fact, Penny—the first racer down—converted with other Olympic skiers in German while waiting for the race to finish.

But the biggest laugh of the post-race press proceedings came when a television man, who had just finished interviewing a German racer, pulled Penny in front of the TV camera and asked her the question:

"Do you speak English?" Penny laughed. "Yes, of course. I'm an American."

The TV man turned back to his camera, somewhat sheepishly, as everyone around guffawed.

Metal skis, while extremely popular with recreational skiers, have been used little in the past by international caliber racers. They complain that the metal skis don't "track" as well as wooden skis at high speed.

MARIJA GUSAKOVA
Russian Gold Medalist

But Betsy Snite, the pretty American skier who had tough luck in the downhill, had nothing but praise for a new pair of Austrian metal skis she used in the race. Though a bad fall knocked her out of the running, she wasn't blaming her new skis. They were "fantastic," she said.

The popular conception of the Russian woman athlete as a bulging-muscled Amazon of huge proportions was destroyed Saturday for newsmen and spectators who had a chance to see Marija Gusakova, U.S.S.R. winner in the ladies' 10-kilometer cross-country race at nearby McKinney Creek.

Mrs. Gusakova is a pretty but shy blonde who wears her long hair in a pony tail, making her appear younger than her 29 years. And she is small enough that she borders on being petite.

And for those accustomed to thinking of Russians as stolid, Mrs. Gusakova was a complete change. During a post-race press conference, she answered questions—through an interpreter—with a charming, bashful smile and twinkling eyes.

Among the answers elicited: She has been skiing cross-country for 10 years. . . . Works in a Leningrad textile factory and, although she lists her occupation as dressmaker, performs a number of different jobs, permitting her to leave the factory for skiing meets. . . . Practices skiing four days a week after work, about 1½ hours each day, also on Sundays. . . . Likes everything here in Squaw Valley, "quite happy."

She was married to Nikolaj Gusakov, member of the U.S.S.R. men's Olympic Nordic team, who is a student in an engineering school. They met, in fact, at a cross-country meet. They have no children.

"Does he think he can do as well as you did when you won a gold medal today?" a newsmen asked Mrs. Gusakova.

She flashed her smile again and spoke her answer in Russian to the newsmen. The interpreter translated it this way: "I hope that my success will inspire him to do as well."

For those who are interested in the unofficial but popular sport of elbow-bending, a cocktail waitress at Squaw Valley Inn reported Saturday that the most popular drink in the house is the time-honored hot buttered rum. Bourbon and Scotch are poor seconds.

Trade has been so brisk in the hot rum drinks, in fact, that the management several times has had to completely stop serving them—they ran out of cups. But service was resumed when more cups were washed.

As for the after-effects, the waitress said the most popular drink after the inn's bar opens in the morning is the "Bloody Mary"—a combination of tomato juice, vodka, "woster" sauce, and tabasco.

Demand for the "Bloody Mary" has been heavy also. Normal opening time for the inn's bar is 11 a.m. But there were so many customers the other morning that service was started at 8:30 a.m.

Sharp Turn Spills Skiers In Downhill

on a few bumps and then . . . out," she continued.

One of her skis struck her in the ribs, knocking the wind from her lungs, and she twisted her ankle slightly. Unable to continue, she permitted ski patrolmen to take her ski off and thus was disqualified.

After the race, she showed newsmen her plastic crash helmet—mandatory for downhill races. Wax from the bottom of her ski was still sticking to the helmet. And there were dents in the top.

"Thank the Lord Penny came through, that's all I can say," said Betsy.

The airplane Myers also fell on the downhill, and Joan Hannah, after running into trouble in the turn, crashed into a control gate. But both finished the race—Miss Hannah 21st.

Miss Meyers was 33rd.

Andrea Mead Lawrence, who won gold medals in slalom and giant slalom at the 1952 Winter Olympics in Oslo and who now is chaperone for the American girls' Alpine team, said Heidi Biebl's victory was a triumph of "good, technical" skiing.

"Heidi is just as strong as a man and she was able to hold on that turn. She was really skiing," said Mrs. Lawrence.

"Nevertheless," she continued, "the girls we have are four terrifically good skiers. Nobody could have skied that course better than Betsy did. . . . She was terrific all the way."

"There wasn't a girl in the place who wasn't planning on winning a gold medal. They're not vicious about it. But that's what they're here for. No one knows how hard they've worked, and trained for this. They don't want second or third. They want the top."

Andy's husband, Dave Lawrence is coach of the girls' Alpine team, and he called Penny's near-fall and the other girls' falls "tough breaks."

Do the American girls still have a chance for gold medals? "You betcha," he said. Pointing out that the slalom and giant slalom events are yet to be run, he commented: "Just wait and see."

Kansas, Nebraska Scramble Big 8

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP)—The Kansas Jayhawks defeated the Colorado Buffaloes 75-67 Saturday night, throwing the Big Eight championship race into a three-way tie as Nebraska upset Kansas State in a game at Lincoln, Neb.

The night's battling left Colorado, Kansas and Kansas State in a deadlock, each with 73 conference records. Nebraska won by a 70-60 score over K-State.

Kentucky Downed

AUBURN, Ala. (AP)—Jimmy Fible's two free throws in the last seconds sparked Auburn to a rousing 61-60 decision over Kentucky Saturday night and kept the Tigers tied with Georgia Tech in the Southeastern Conference basketball race.

Harrisburg Runnerup

Lowell Wrestlers Trico Champions

LOWELL—Lowell's Red Devil wrestling team won only two individual titles but picked up enough places to win the Tri-County League wrestling tourney here Saturday night.

Lowell had 105 points to edge second-place Harrisburg with 94. McKenzie (81), Mohawk (70), Triangle Lake (66) and Crow (26) followed in that order.

The top four wrestlers in each weight division earned berths in the District 5 (A-2 and B) tourney at Harrisburg next Saturday. In addition to Trico wrestlers, competitors from Reedsport, Sislaw, Mapleton and Newport will be represented in the district meet.

Following are the championship and consolation finals, from which the four district entries are picked.

gon ahead 58-57—but the advantage was brief. Pimm scored two rapid fielders (his seventh and eighth in as many shots) and the Trojans went in front for keeps.

Oregon used a pressing defense and USC a control-type offense in the closing minutes—and Oregon managed to narrow the margin to one point, 69-68 with 1:37 showing on the clock. Rask scored on a high pass from Strickland and then seconds later connected from close in for the one-point difference.

Bob Hampton, scored from close while Oregon attempted to break up USC's stalling "offense" and Jim White connected on a follow-up shot to put USC ahead 73-68 with 74 seconds remaining.

Rask connected with two free throws 10 seconds later to close the gap to three points, but Hampton made one of two free throws on Moore's intentional foul. Pimm added three free throws and that was all the Trojans needed for a seven-point lead. Bill Simmons hit a free throw and Butch Kilmington in a shot as the gun sounded for the final four-point margin.

USC hit a torrid 5.77 in the second half for a game total of 491. Oregon had 361 in the second half and finished with a comparatively feeble 319—and that was a big difference.

Golden Bears Clip Bruins

LOS ANGELES (AP)—California sewed up at least a tie for the Big Five basketball title Saturday night, cutting down the UCLA Bruins 67-57.

The Golden Bears, defending NCAA champs, notched their 20th victory against one loss—and did it in convincing fashion. It was their 11th straight triumph. They held the bewildered Bruins to only four field goals in the first half and rambled to a 36-25 halftime lead.

The Bruins fought back in the second half, closing the gap to 50-45 with 10 minutes left. But Cal scored a quick five points to put the game out of reach.

CALIFORNIA (67)—Gills 22, McClintock 13, Imhoff 14, Wendell 4, Schultz 3, Mann 6, Stafford, Doughty 3, Pearson.

UCLA (57)—Miller 5, Cunningham 13, Berberich 2, Green 10, Blackman 5, Jones, Ellis 12, Kniff, Hicks 2, Brandon.
