

Plane Crash Laid to Error In Diagram

Manual Is Blamed In CAB's Probe

An error in an aircraft manual diagram led to the plane crash Jan. 20 in which the pilot was killed at the Springfield airport, according to findings of an investigation just released by the Civil Aeronautics Board in Washington, D.C.

The report on the test flight in which pilot Leland Urban DeJean, 34, of Springfield, was killed, stated that the aileron (wing) control system was installed in reverse but was identical to the diagram in an aircraft service manual.

The plane, a Piper PA-24, had been rebuilt by DeJean from salvage parts taken from three aircraft, according to Milt Ruberg, owner of the McKenzie Flying Service.

The plane crashed on the runway during its initial test flight. A preliminary investigation made by the Federal Aviation Agency showed the apparent cause of the accident was the inadvertent reverse connection of the aileron controls.

Robert L. Kagy, FAA district supervisor from Medford, who witnessed the accident, explained the reverse controls would cause the plane to turn or bank in a direction opposite the normal path of flight steered by the pilot. The CAB report noted that the plane followed a normal takeoff and was airborne some five feet when the right wing lowered, then struck the ground.

The CAB also stated the plane had been rebuilt by DeJean, a certified and qualified mechanic who held a commercial pilot's rating.

IDENTICAL IN INSTALLATION
The rest of the CAB report reads: "Subsequent investigation failed to reveal any evidence of a malfunction on the part of the aircraft or any of its components. However, the investigation did disclose the aileron control system was installed in such a manner that movement of the pilot's control wheel caused the ailerons to move in the opposite directions from which they should."

"A comparative study of the aileron control system as installed in N5286P (DeJean's plane) with the aileron control system diagram found in the Piper Service Manual, PA-24 Comanche, Copyright 1959, Page 54, Figure 7-2, disclosed the two systems to be identical in installation," the report concludes.

The general sales manager of Piper Aircraft Corp., J. W. Miller, of Lock Haven, Pa., in a telephone conversation told the Register-Guard that the firm's "service organization is of the opinion that the service manual could have been interpreted in the wrong manner." Miller said Piper has not completed its investigation of the matter.

REVISION IS CLAIMED
A revision of the cable diagram in the Piper service manual on the PA-24 was received during the past week by the McKenzie Aircraft Repair in Springfield, according to Charles Wells of that firm.

A regional FAA official in Los Angeles said last week that responsibility for the correct operation of an aircraft prior to its flight would fall on the mechanic and pilot as well as the manufacturer.

The official noted that prior to each flight an aircraft must be inspected to insure "normal" function of all moving surfaces.

Wilderness Bill Is In For A Rough Time

More Amendments Due in Committee

By JOHN KAMPS
Of the Associated Press
WASHINGTON — A highly controversial wilderness area bill, almost amended to death last year, will run into more proposed amendments at Senate Interior Committee meetings this week.

The measure, strongly opposed would set up and preserve wilderness areas throughout the country. Opponents include:

Ranchers, afraid they might lose the right to graze cattle and sheep on federal land; lumbermen, anxious to preserve the right to cut timber on federal land; oil and gas drillers and prospectors, who continue looking for petroleum and minerals on public land and reclamationists, who claim irrigation projects would be blocked.

GET 10,000 LETTERS
The Interior committee heard about 500 witnesses testify for and against the bill last year at hearings in Seattle, Phoenix and Washington, D. C.

An estimated 10,000 letters and postcards received by the committee. Members of Congress, including the 17 senators cosponsoring the bill, got thousands more.

The bill was revised dozens of times at numerous meetings of the committee in 1959. It finally was put aside at the request of Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D-Wyo) after he suffered a stroke. 15 OUT OF 600

The committee resumed consideration Feb. 16. After an hour of discussion members were able to agree on about 15 lines of a bill which is expected to run about 600 lines averaging 10 words each.

Before the committee comes up with a bill it will have to dispose of:

A substitute proposed by O'Mahoney; 16 amendments offered by Sen. Gordon Allott (R-Colo), and others proposed by Sens. Wallace C. Bennett (R-Utah), Henry Dworshak (R-Idaho), and Ernest Gruening (D-Alaska).

IN SOME FORM

Most of the amendments are aimed at fully protecting existing rights to use federal lands which would be included in the wilderness areas and restricting additions to the system. Several would require an act of Congress to add any area to the system. The bill, in some form, is expected to clear the Senate Interior committee.

The committee plans to resume work on the bill Tuesday.

Injured U. of W. Coed Reports Due Out of Her Long Coma On Payola

A 21-year-old University of Washington coed who was critically injured Dec. 29 in a truck-crash that claimed the lives of four others north of Eugene has regained consciousness.

The coed, Barbara Jean Hill, of Seattle, was listed in satisfactory condition for the first time Saturday at Sacred Heart Hospital.

Miss Hill had been able to recognize visitors and to say a few words with "coaching" this past week, according to her mother, Mrs. Dorothy Brodd.

Mrs. Brodd, who flew to Eugene from Seattle the day of the accident, has been here since that time.

She said Saturday that her daughter has been able to eat for the past few weeks and is making improvement daily.

Miss Hill was one of five students en route to the Rose Bowl game when their station wagon and a truck-trailer collided in heavy fog six miles north of Eugene on Highway 99. The other four students were killed.

Miss Hill received multiple fractures and a head injury in the early-morning accident. She was unconscious for more than 30 days.

She was scheduled to graduate from the university this month. Her major field was zoology.

Reports Due On Payola

WASHINGTON — House investigators ordered two big government agencies Saturday to report early next month on steps they have taken to stamp out payola.

Shifting the spotlight from disc jockeys and record companies, the probers scheduled new hearings for March 3-4 to hear from the Federal Communications Commission and the Federal Trade Commission.

The announcement by Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark) of the House Legislative Oversight subcommittee shed little additional light on the group's future plans. Harris said merely that the FCC and the FTC will testify on "their actions and activities to date on payola."

The FCC, which regulates the broadcasting industry, has asked each radio and TV station in the country to report whether its personnel have been involved in payola, or undercover payments for plugging records.

And the FTC, which polices the trade industries, has filed complaints against more than 40 record distributors and manufacturers accusing them of payola practices.

They Go Together
LONDON (UPI) — Burglars stole Alan Matthews' record collection last month. He said they returned Friday and took his record player.
