Let's Draw A Beehive

By Ann Davidow

To keep their honey close to home, Bees live inside their honeycomb.

And so their hive is full of cells containing bees and honey wells.

What's in His Right Hand? By Ragna Eskil

Put an array of small objects, such as a dried bean, a pea, a ring, a closed safety pin, etc., in a box. Pass the box around the circle of players, then ask one player who is in on the trick to select one object with his left hand. He must do this secretly, shut his hand tightly, and cover it with his right hand. Then ask the players to guess what is in his right hand. The answer is—his left hand!

Twig Twister By E. Witter

Cowboys have to keep their hands limber and quick, ready for the big lassoing jobs ahead. One way to do this and have fun, too, is to play a game using twigs that was taught to the white man by the Indians. Here it is:

Each cowboy stands up, stretches his hands out in front, palms down and close together. One player, who is the Indian, places six small twigs (about four inches long) on the backs of the cowboy's two hands. When the Indian says, "How!" the cowboy flips the twigs up in the air, twirls around in a complete circle, and tries to catch the twigs in his two palms as they fall. If he fails, he gets two more tries. The one who catches the most twigs is the Indian for the next round.
