

Candidates in Last Month's Primary

Campaigns Totalled Nearly $140,000

By DOUGLAS GRIPP
of the United Press International

SALEM — Campaigns for statewide and congressional offices in last month's Oregon primary election cost close to $140,000, a tally of reports in the State Elections Division showed Friday.

Stanley E. Hartman, Portland druggist, spent only $119 in securing the Republican nomination for Congress in the third district.

On the other hand, the committee for Edwin R. Durno, fourth district congressman from Medford, spent $16,844 but lost the Republican nomination for U.S. Senator to Sig Unander, Portland.

The three most costly campaigns, in order, were Unander's, at $29,321; the renomination of Sen. Wayne Morse, D-Ore., $18,844, and the Durno effort.

The least expensive campaign for major office was that of Chief Justice William McAllister, who ran unopposed for another term on the high court. He spent only $19.

The only campaign expense report not yet received here from a major candidate is that of Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore. Here is a list of all the campaign expenses for major office in the primary, with D signifying Democrat and R for Republican:

U.S. Senate
D—Charles E. Gilbert, Portland $2,169; Wayne Morse, Eugene $68,843. R—Sig Unander $29,321 and Jim Bacaloff $1,429, both of Portland; Edwin R. Durno, Medford $16,844; Harold M. Livingston $2,383 and Glenn E. Brixey $573, both of Corvallis, and R. F. Cook, Scotts Mills $290.
