Brief Visit to Oregon

Brinkley Shy, Hard-Working

By DAN SELLARD
Of the Register-Guard

GEARHART (Special)—The off-camera David Brinkley is about the same as the on-camera Brinkley, except that he doesn't talk as much.

While some of his viewers may have the impression that Brinkley is a "pretty boy" with the he is actually a hard-working, investigative newsmen. He's a little shy except when he's working and then he's the inquisitive reporter who takes a lot to his job.

Brinkley was here Monday night and all day Tuesday to rub elbows with members of the Douglas Fir Plywood Assn., sponsors of his prize-winning TV show, "David Brinkley's Journal." The meeting seemed to be mutually satisfactory.

When surprise was expressed that he stayed here as long as he did, Brinkley had a terse answer. (Most of his answers and comments are terse; this man wastes few words.)

"I had to stay this long," he said. "There weren't any airplanes scheduled and it had to be this way."

Even so, Brinkley seemed to relish the pause in the routine which he complains is so harsh. "It wouldn't be so bad," he said, "if you were just a hired face with pretty teeth and all you had to do was read from a Teleprompter, but I can't do that."

Brinkley writes everything he reads, including the "Journal" and his part of the "Huntley-Brinkley" nightly news show.

Doing the "Journal" is tough, Brinkley reports. At lunch, he told his sponsors that "when you're trying to lead the pack, trying to experiment, you're likely to be less than first class."

He calls the show a "public affairs thing but not the standard show which does things that are in the news."

At various times of the day, Brinkley expressed dissatisfaction with the show that has won so many honors.

"When you're in something this complicated—with 30 or 40 people working on it—it's impossible to back out . . . Not very often can you junk it and start over . . . It's not like writing a story, you know."

Yet Brinkley has professional pride in what he's doing. He believes that his kind of show is the "different" approach needed by television.

"I used to be the only man on TV without a gun. I suppose next year I'll be the only man without a stethoscope."

He wants to stop working so hard someday, Brinkley confessed.

What will he cut out? "It's hard to tell. This news show is rough and I've been doing it ten years now. . . This Wednesday night show may run its course . . . I don't rightly know. It's a seven-day week and it's too much."

That Brinkley is first a news reporter is evidenced by the dislikes he shows in private conversation and by his inquiring mind.

The dislikes are of the camera-toters; of the "peas and carrots" after-dinner and lunch speeches he makes; and the lack of time to always do the best possible job.

His inquiring mind is always working. He asked questions about the Oregon coastal scenery, the age of the hotel, and the condition of the economy.

He professed to know very little about plywood, the product which these days is putting lots of money in the Brinkley pocket, but he likes it, both as a product and as a sponsor.

He's building a house and he's using plywood.
