Pvt. Hargrove Battling Brass Years Later

'See Hear' Author
Fights Movie Moguls

By BOB THOMAS
Of the Associated Press

HOLLYWOOD — Twenty years later, Private Hargrove is still battling the brass. The difference is that his adversaries are not the top kicks and shavetails from whom he extracted his wartime best seller, "See Here, Private Hargrove."

Now he is contending with the production minds of the Hollywood studios. It might add that as one of the town's most in-demand comedy writers, his pay is somewhat different this time.

Hargrove appears to have prospered in spite of his refusal to knuckle under the Hollywood system. But he admitted in his cozy Universal office—with a view of Cary Grant's Rolls Royce—that it sometimes pays to be cautious.

'Don't Tell Them'

"Most of the time I am writing satire," he explained, "but the trick is never to tell the producers that it is satire. That would scare them."

Hargrove came here in 1955 to research and write a comedy about the peacetime Army, "The Girl He Left Behind," for Warner Brothers. He persuaded the studio to let him write the yarn as a book while a script writer followed it into a scenario. Hargrove's hilarious passages came out serious in the script; Hollywood was on a drama kick.

While waiting for the studios to come over to comedy, Hargrove turned out a pack of television westerns—"the way westerns should be written," that is, funny. His "Mavericks" were pure satire, but no one admitted it out loud.

Hollywood finally found out that comedies sell, and he was in demand for features. He converted "Music Man" to films and had his sport with bossman J. L. Warner doing so. Hargrove proposed during opening scenes to have one store marked the J. L. Meat Market.

'How Will They Know?'

"Very funny," said Warner. "But how will anybody know it's mine?"

"Easy," said the writer. "We'll have a closeup showing a thumb on the scale."

Hargrove did an adaptation for the Kim Novak comedy, "Boy's Night Out," but battled with the director. "I had to apologize for calling him a frustrated writer," Hargrove recalled. "I told him it was his writer who was the frustrated writer."

He next tried producing and writing the television series "Follow the Sun" for 20th Century-Fox. "I'm not really cowardly," he said. "But I admit I was one of the first rats to leave that sinking ship."

He clashed with Peter G. Leavathes, who told him comedy could not be sustained in an hour show. Hargrove went west, the series went serious, and to its doom.

Hilarious Asides

The writer went as far west as Universal, where he wrote "40 Pounds of Trouble"—"about normal, healthy people who naturally hate children." He's now working on another comedy, "One Arabian Night." Like all his scripts, it is studded with hilarious asides and descriptions.

"I throw those in so producers and actors will actually read the scripts," he explained. "Otherwise they just count the pages or their own lines."

Couldn't Hargrove get a book out of Hollywood, as he did with the Army? "No," he said. "Too fantastic."

Sioma Kagan, professor of international business at the School of Business Administration at the University of Oregon will conduct a series of seminars next month in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

He has been asked to head the seminars by the Instituto para el Desarrollo de Ejecutivos en la Argentina (I.D.E.A.).

The Council for International Progress in Management will provide the financial sponsorship of Kagan's tour around Latin America. In addition to visiting Argentina, Kagan will tour Brazil, Uruguay, Chile, Bolivia, Peru and Panama.

This summer, Kagan will also be faculty leader in executive development programs offered by the graduate school of business at Columbia University and in Prudential's development programs at Princeton University.

Kagan recently contributed the three chapters on international environment to the "Hand Book for Executive Development" published by the Society for Advancement of Management.
