Watershed Bids Asked

Bids are now being advertised for construction of a new federal-local watershed project, the second in Lane County and the third in Oregon.

The project involves diversion and control of Lynx Hollow Creek at a point about midway between the communities of Creswell and Cottage Grove.

The Upper Willamette Soil Conservation District and the Creswell Water Control District are the sponsoring agencies.

Actually, the Lynx Hollow watershed project was the first in the state to have a work plan approved. That was in 1958. But it has taken until this year to clear obstacles before construction could begin. In the meantime, the Willakenzie watershed project north of Springfield and Eugene and one near Salem were started.

The Soil Conservation Service is the federal agency involved in such projects. The cost of construction of the Lynx Hollow project will be borne about 92 per cent by the federal government and 8 per cent by local political units, primarily the Creswell Water Control District.

The Creswell district is responsible for purchasing right-of-way. The district is financing its portion of the cost through a loan from the Federal Housing Authority.

The work for which bids will be opened Aug. 1 calls for construction of a diversion channel about 2,100 feet long. The channel will cut off Lynx Hollow creek at a point just northwest of the intersection of old Highway 99 and Lynx Hollow Creek Road south of Creswell.

It will take the water east, cross under the highway and a Southern Pacific railroad track and empty into the coast fork of the Willamette River. The second half of the channel will be concrete lined.

Within about a month, the Soil Conservation Service hopes to call for bids on the second half of the project which consists mainly of enlarging the present channel of Lynx Hollow Creek from the diversion point to its present junction with the Willamette coast fork about seven miles away.

The purpose of the entire watershed project is to relieve flooding of about 1,100 acres, mostly farm land.

The diversion channel portion of the job is expected to be done before start of rain this winter.

The project engineer for the conservation service is Bob Funk of the Eugene office.

Former Naval Attache to Speak at UO

Capt. Robert S. Brookings II, former U.S. Naval attache in South Viet Nam, will give two speeches: the University of Oregon next week.

He will give a Browning Room lecture in Erb Memorial Union Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. standard, 7:30 daylight, on the topic "The Role of Foreign Military Assistance in Southeast Asia." Wednesday at 3 p.m. standard, 4 daylight, Brookings will speak at a coffee forum on the topic "Military Assistance Programs," also in Erb Memorial Union.

Brookings is participating in a world affairs institute at the university. Both of his talks will be open to the public.

Brookings, a graduate of Harvard University and the Wharton School of Business, is retiring from the Navy this year after 27 years of service. Much of his military work involved administration and support of mutual defense and military assistance aspects of foreign aid programs in Turkey, Indo-China and Formosa.

His past tours include an assignment as commanding officer of Naval Support Activity, Taiwan Base Command, Republic of China.
