State Unit Rejects Bridge Cost Deal

BURNS, Ore. — Bridges at opposite ends of the state figured prominently Thursday as the Oregon Highway Commission toured roads in the high desert of Eastern Oregon.

The commission, holding one of its rare meetings out of Salem, decided at a night session in Burns against taking over half of the cost of the Columbia River bridge between Longview, Wash., and Rainier, Ore.

"Since Oregon is taking the biggest load on the bridge at Astoria, we don't wish to take part of the load of the Longview bridge," said Glenn Jackson, commission chairman.

The request came from the Washington Highway Department, which said the bridge will become toll-free in a few months.

The Astoria bridge is to cost $24 million. Oregon will pay two-thirds of the deficit not paid by tolls. Washington will pay the other third. Construction of the 4.1-mile long bridge started a few weeks ago.

Earlier at Ontario, Ore., Jackson said a new bridge is planned across the Snake River there.

It will be a four-lane bridge, planned to carry the load that now is putting 5,400 vehicles a day on a two-lane bridge, Jackson said. He added that another new bridge, built south of Ontario, had not helped the situation as much as hoped.

Four New Aides Named at OSU Science School

CORVALLIS — An assistant dean of the School of Science has been named at Oregon State University along with three assistant directors of the Science Research Institute.

They will assist Vernon H. Chedelin, dean of science and director of the Science Research Institute, in administering academic and research programs. President James H. Jensen said.

David B. Nicodemus, associate professor of physics, will be assistant dean of the School of Science on a half-time basis. He will continue to teach half time in the department of physics.

His chief responsibility in the new assignment will be to head up curricular planning and programs for the school—largest on campus with nearly 2,000 students enrolled.

Tson E. King, Robert W. Newburgh and Allen B. Scott, all faculty members of the chemistry department, will be assistant directors of the Science Research Institute.

Venezuela Students Source of Violence

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
Of the Associated Press

CARACAS, Venezuela — For Juanito, few things are as soul-satisfying as burning a street car.

Juanito is a student. In his high school days he already was a veteran of street rioting. In the university, his studies are secondary. He majors in politics, often violent, as the road to quick success.

In Latin America political are a highly important political element, and as such are prime targets for Communist subversion.

What makes the student what he is?

Venezuela is a capsule study of the whole question of student unrest and violence in the continent.

Not all Venezuelan students are extremists, by any means, but enough exist to make life miserable for any government.

Venezuela is a young country. Half its population is under 20. The young men are a big source of pressure.

The average age of the student in Central University is 24. Some graduate younger, but many are older. Some are professional students, remaining such far into their 30s, subsidized in this career by political parties to work within student organizations. Teodoro Petkoff, a student leader and reputed agent of the Communist party is 33.

University autonomy is a tradition and a government headache. There is no written law, but only the bravest politician would violate the tradition which says police cannot enter the campus unless invited by the authorities of the university itself.

Reds Have Refuge

Students raise Cain on the campus with impunity. Communists who are sworn enemies of the government take refuge there. Communist Hector Mujica, head of the journalism department—an impeccably dressed man who loves flashy and luxurious automobiles—has been held up within university grounds for months since he left the Congress. He thus surrendered his parliamentary immunity to prosecution on charges of acting seditiously against the government of President Romulfo Betancourt.

Since students take part in all sorts of violent politics, they often are instrumental in the fall of governments, such as the Perez Jimenez dictatorship that used to rule Venezuela. Thus they surround themselves with a sort of Democratic aura. But there is always a threat of bloody violence from the direction of the university. It also is recruiting ground for young romantics who dream of being guerrilla fighters in the hills.

There is, of course, much serious study in the university. But for many, the law and politics offer the quick way to success. Many are impatient for overnight miracles which will make their nation catch up to the standards of Western Europe and the United States.

Some of the students themselves are beginning to take a close look at things as they are. There is change in the air in Venezuela's Central University; the violence-minded extremists of the far left have been defeated in university elections, though by narrow margins.

But the anti-Communist element is becoming less and less inclined to bow to Red intimidation. There seems a growing conviction in Caracas that anti-Communist students will carry the day.
