

Memorable Meeting

Oh, joyous chance encounter,
My gladness knows no bounds!
I met my husband's old flame—
She's put on 20 pounds.

—Susanne Douglas

Quips and Quotes

The young man proposed to his girl friend and was accepted with alacrity. But she lost no time in laying down the law. "Now, darling, since we're engaged, we have to economize," she said. "I want you to promise that you won't do anything you can't afford."

The boy looked startled. "If I promised that, I'd have to break our engagement!" he said.

Installment buying is not putting off until tomorrow what you couldn't afford then, either.

—Ivern Boyett

Song of the Good Husband

Because you are no femme fatale,
Do you suppose, dear wife,
I sometimes wish some glamour gal
Would glorify my life?

That for a moment I'd consent
To trade your charms for Liz's,
Or ever wish I were the gent
Who made Miss Loren Mrs.?

You'll find an honest answer lies
Within your heart, my darlin',
When next entranced, with dreaming eyes,
You're watching Rock or Marlon.

—Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

"I have this terrible fear of fire."

Mrs. Brown had gone on a strict diet. That meant everybody in the family went on a diet, too, whether they needed it or not. One evening she asked her husband to call the children for dinner.

"Good," said the hungry spouse. "What are we having?"

"Chopped lettuce, scalloped carrots, diced celery, and turnip rings. Now, for heavens sakes, call the children in."

The husband shouted out the window: "Come on, kids. Better hurry—your supper is getting wilted." —A.T. Quigg
