

At Courthouse Ceremonies

U. S. Gains 25 New Citizens

"This is a good time and a good place to become a citizen," 25 newly naturalized Americans were told during ceremonies at the Lane County Courthouse Wednesday morning.

The speaker was Hans Linde, who was naturalized 20 years ago after coming to this country from Denmark. He is now an associate professor in the University of Oregon's School of Law.

"The fear and hate of minority groups that grew out of World War I is disappearing," Linde told the new citizens. "And in Oregon, where almost everyone is new, it will be that much easier to become a member of the community on your own merits."

Circuit Judge Roland Rodman presided over the ceremonies in which persons from 11 foreign countries took the oath of allegiance. Germany led the list of contributing nations with six new citizens.

The group was welcomed by another naturalized citizen, Ina Randolph, who performed her first official act as head of the new Department of Records and Elections by greeting the citizens on behalf of the county government.

"Speaking from experience," Mrs. Randolph said, "I'm sure you'll find that the more you participate in community affairs the more you'll appreciate your citizenship." She noted that she had come to the United States from Sweden as a girl.

Councilman Robert Deverell extended a welcome on behalf of the City of Eugene. And Russel Tompkins, a teacher in naturalization classes sponsored by the Civitan Club and the city's schools, urged his former students to start their participation "with face-to-face relationships."

Linde, the morning's principal speaker, told the group that prejudice toward immigrants has become "unacceptable" in modern America. "We face a much greater crisis in trying to bring full citizenship to the 15 million Americans whose skins are black," Linde said.
