work and participate in Farm the Congregation?

EMO: Drop by a farmer table or join our buying club and support local farmers and build relationships in your community! Take some fresh food home and have a meal with your friends and family. Volunteer with us! We are always looking for volunteers interested in helping out by distributing recipes, sorting produce, assisting with cooking classes and more. Join us in October for our food justice fundraiser featuring Tracie McMillan, author of The American Way of Eating. Email foodandfaith@emoregon.org if you would like to help out. Donate to IFFP to support projects that make the connection between food and faith and contribute to a healthy, local food system. Donations can be made at <https://ssl.charityweb.net/emoregon/>, be sure to select "Interfaith Food and Farms Partnership".

August 29th: Introduction to Canning: Learn how to can and preserve fresh foods throughout the winter! This lesson will teach you how to can your own homemade salsas. [$30 Class, scholarships available]

IFFP has a number of different toolkits and resources available including the Congregational Health Index (CHI), an assessment tool and planning guide that helps your faith community identify strengths and areas for improvement and create an action plan for health-impacting changes. The CHI can be downloaded off the www.faithandwellness.org website. This website also contains resources and inspiration around faith and wellness.

Other toolkits available on the IFFP website

http://emoregon.org/food\_farms.php) include "Food Sovereignty for All: Overhauling the Food System with Faith-Based Initiatives" and "Creating Opportunity through Micro-Enterprise: Faith Kitchens as Micro-Business Incubators".

We are especially excited about our Rockwood Voices for Food Justice project that will start in September in Gresham's Rockwood neighborhood. A team of low-income residents reflecting the diversity of the neighborhood will conduct an assessment in culturally appropriate ways to find out what challenges residents face in accessing food and what their ideas are for creating more opportunities for healthy food.
