Teen Athlete Cardiac Screening at Randall's Children's Hospital

Even teens who seem healthy and have passed a physical may have heart problems that can lead to sudden cardiac arrest.

Teen athletes and their parents will learn about heart health and find out whether they may be at risk of an undiagnosed heart condition at Randall Children's Hospital at Legacy Emanuel's sixth annual Teen Athlete Cardiac Screening on Saturday, Oct. 20, at the Adidas Village from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Preregistration is required at www.legacyhealth.org/TACS.

The Teen Athlete Cardiac Screening will serve 500 students from throughout the Portland metropolitan area ages 13-19 and only costs families $10 per student.

The Teen Athlete Cardiac Screening provides heart health and risk assessment that helps identify whether a teen may be at risk from an undiagnosed heart condition known as hypertrophic cardiomyopathy (HCM) the leading cause of sudden cardiac death among young competitive athletes and the second most prevalent form of heart muscle disease.

Once diagnosed, this life threatening heart condition can be treated to minimize its risk.

Recommendations will be made from a primary care physician or pediatric cardiologist to those needing further evaluation.

The screening does not take the place of the medical examination required for all student athletes participating in a school sport. For more info go to www.legacyhealth.org/TACS.
