film, because I feel like I'm really just beginning to learn how to use all these tools. It's a real experience working in a big studio system. It's like learning how to command a battleship.

KW: The Columbus Short question: Are you happy?

PR: I'm very happy with the work and the spirit my crew brought to the movie. I couldn't be prouder of them.

KW: The Teri Emerson question: When was the last time you had a good laugh?

PR: Today! I've been laughing a lot lately. [LOL] This is my first time directing, and it's been quite a roller coaster ride.

KW: What is your guiltiest pleasure?

PR: Playing the video game Halo 4.

KW: The bookworm Troy Johnson question: What was the last book you read?

PR: What I'm reading a new book by Robert Greene called "Mastery."

KW: When you look in the mirror, what do you see?

PR: I see a guy who always feels like he's a beginner. Sometimes it's a good thing, sometimes it's a bad thing, but I can't shake that image of myself.

KW: I can't recall who said it, but that makes me think of the saying, "The greatest freedom is the freedom to begin again."

PR: Very true. I think there's a Zen saying about a beginner's mind.

KW: The Ling-Ju Yen question: What is your earliest childhood memory?

PR: My earliest childhood memory is very abstract. I must have been about 3 years-old. It's just me in the backyard looking at a flower. I have another one from when I was just a little bit older of my parents taking me to see Snow White at a drive-in theater.
