VOTES ARE IN

In this Nov. 3, 2014, file photo, Diego Valencia processes Oregon ballots at Multnomah County election headquarters in Portland, Ore. An unprecedented number of Oregon voters have changed their registrations to Republican or Democrat this year, meaning they're now eligible to vote in the upcoming May 17 primary. Experts say it's likely foretelling of a record-breaking voter turnout, especially if the Bernie Sanders campaign keeps its momentum.

Portland Voters Come Out for Bernie Sanders

Most in a straw poll of last-minute voters favored Vermont senator

A steady stream of cars drove southbound on SE 11th Avenue Tuesday to drop off their ballots for the May primary election before the 8 p.m. deadline.

On the sidewalk outside the Multnomah County Elections Office, people walked, biked and took the bus to get last-minute ballots.

The results of the primary election determine Oregon's choice for the Democratic presidential nominee, choosing between the current front-runner Hillary Clinton and the progressive underdog Bernie Sanders — along with party nominations for the state gubernatorial race.

Sanders ended up winning 54.3 percent of the vote in Oregon to Clinton's 48.3 percent, where 65 percent of the state's Republican voters cast their votes for presumed nominee Donald Trump. See more results on this page.

The Skanner News visited the election drop site to ask voters why they were voting and what issues were the most important to them.

An overwhelming number of voters said they came out to vote for Bernie Sanders. Musician Stevie Pohlman of the band Mope Grooves said that he voted "because I want Bernie Sanders to win."

Another Sanders supporter said he was worried that Sanders was going to be discounted before the people in the state of Oregon were able to give him a chance. "I am hoping that if he wins Oregon, we can push him through," he said.

A few voters for Sanders said that he had inspired them to become more engaged. Vanessa Kinyon pushed a stroller with her infant daughter up to the elections office. She said health care was her most important issue after she had health complications during her last pregnancy. Kinyon said she had to juggle three different health insurance providers and pay three different deductibles to receive treatment.

Sanders Wins Oregon, Battles Clinton in Ky.; Trump Wins Ore. Kentucky primary considered too close to call

Ken Thomas, Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bernie Sanders won Oregon's presidential primary and battled Hillary Clinton to a razor-thin margin in Kentucky, vowing to stay in the race until the end as Clinton aimed to blunt his momentum and prepare for a fall campaign against Republican Donald Trump.

Tuesday's primary in Kentucky was too close to call with Clinton leading Sanders by less than one-half of 1 percent. Closing in on the Democratic nomination, Clinton declared victory in Kentucky nonetheless, telling her supporters on Twitter: "We're always stronger united."

Trump won the GOP's Oregon primary, the only Republican contest on Tuesday. In a sign of his pivot into the
