revolving around a film director's (Margherita Buy) attempt to care for her terminally-ill mother (Giulia Lazzarini) while shooting a movie with a disappointing leading man (John Turturro). With writer/director Nanni Moretti, Beatrice Mancini and Stefano Abbati. (In English, Italian and French with subtitles)

Morris from America (R for sexuality, brief nudity, teen drug use and partying, and pervasive profanity) Markes Christmas plays the title character in this coming-of-age comedy about a 13 year-old, African-American's adjustment to life in Germany after his father (Craig Robinson) takes a job in Heidelberg as a pro soccer coach. With Carla Juri, Lina Keller and Jakub Gierszal. (In English and German with subtitles)

The People vs. Fritz Bauer (R for sexuality) Historical drama, set in 1957, revolving around the German Attorney General (Burghart Klauszner) who brought Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann (Michael Schenk) to justice. With Rudiger Klink, Andrej Kamnsky and Jorg Schuttauf. (In English, German, Yiddish and Spanish with subtitles)

Spaceman (R for drug use and pervasive profanity) Josh Duhamel handles the title role in this biopic chronicling the life after baseball of eccentric Boston Red Sox pitcher Bill Lee. Cast includes Ernie Hudson, W. Earl Brown and Sterling K. Brown.

A Tale of Love and Darkness (PG-13 for mature themes and disturbing, violent images) Natalie Portman wrote, directed and stars in this adaptation of Amos Oz's (Amir Tessler) memoir about growing up Jewish in Jerusalem prior to Israeli statehood. With Shira Haas, Ohad Knoller and Makram Khoury. (In Hebrew with subtitles) death, but I think this idea that we need perfect victims is problematic. Mike Brown is killed after he steals cigarettos from a store, a point I concede in the first chapter of the book, as well as the fact that his hands weren't up and he probably wasn't running away. Mike Brown wasn't blameless, but robbery still isn't a capital offense, nor should be for Eric Garner for selling loose cigarettes on the street in Staten Island. The question isn't are these people perfect, but rather are they subject to a level of surveillance, policing and punishment commensurate with their crimes? I want to live in a world where you don't have to be perfect to survive. I think Mike Brown is a perfect representation of Black Lives Matter precisely because he isn't perfect. He still deserved to live.

KW: Do you think video games and gangsta rap might have contributed to the image of the black male as violent and dangerous, perhaps causing cops to have an itchy trigger finger around them?

MLH: Video games don't help, rap music doesn't help, and news outlets running B-roll footage of black people being violent doesn't help, but I think there's a deeper cultural problem that we need to wrestle with. There has never been a moment, since the birth of White supremacy, when we didn't think Black people were violent.

KW: In your conclusion you say, "Empires eventually fall, and that freedom is closer than we think." Are you expressing your expectations about America?

MLH: I'm saying nothing lasts forever, whether it's Greece, Rome or the British Empire. It doesn't mean that America has to end. The country could be reshaped and reimagined in a way that is even more democratic and less imperial in nature. We're trying to radically reshape the nation in ways that are more just and fairer. That's what I mean when I say that empires eventually fall. I'm not calling for the end of America.
