clever of all of them. It's really smart. If you see it twice, you'll notice a lot of things you missed the first time. I'm just happy that we continue to outdo ourselves, man, because, at this point, it's like, "How are we doing this?" There's definitely a higher power controlling the franchise.

KW: What's it like shooting without Paul?

L: It's very emotional. That's a void that will never be filled. All we can do is carry on his legacy by making the best movie possible. That adds a little pressure on us.

KW: But you did manage to outdo yourselves. Other than James Bond and some of the comic book adaptations, I can't think of another franchise with such staying power.

L: Exactly! That's what we like to do... break records!

KW: How do you explain the series' enduring appeal?

L: I think maybe our really being a family off-screen might have a lot to do with the chemistry you see on-screen.

KW: What's new about your character, Tej, this go-round?

L: Tej Parker's happy because he got himself a tank provided by the U.S. government. And you also get to see some skills that you never knew he had. I just love how he continues to grow along with the entire franchise. That makes it so special.

KW: You have some excellent lines in this episode, and so does Tyrese. The film also features some great banter between Dwayne Johnson and Jason Statham's characters. Charlize Theron was a terrific villain.

picture's greatest qualities. While women were already fans of the franchise, her performance literally taken it up another notch, because she brings her own fan base.

KW: She disappeared into the role so well, I didn't even know it was Charlize for at least 10 minutes after she made her first appearance.

L: Dude, that's what I'm trying to tell you. She's so good at what she does that she make Vin and everybody else around her better. We just continue to up the ante.

KW: You know what was hilarious? How Clint Eastwood's son, Scott, is in the film, but playing a nerd instead of a macho character you'd expect.

L: We always like flipping the script a little and doing the unexpected which is why it's so successful.
