based near New Orleans, said the storms temporarily closed 66 stores in the Houston area and disrupted the company's end-of-summer hiring. One store was so damaged it still hasn't reopened.

In August and September, the company typically hires new employees to replace college workers who return to school. But that process was delayed in Florida and Texas.

"We weren't able to do our normal hiring spree that we usually do going into the fall," Harmon said.

The storms also disrupted the company's expansion plans. It opened 65 stores nationwide in the July-September quarter. It would have opened four more, but they were damaged while under construction.

Each Smoothie King employs about 15 hourly workers and two to three managers.

Nationwide, an alternative barometer of the labor force that includes not only the unemployed but also part-time workers who'd prefer full-time jobs, fell to 8.3 percent. That's the lowest such level in over a decade.

Average hourly wages rose a healthy 2.9 percent from 12 months earlier. That trend was probably inflated by the loss of so many lower-paid workers in hurricane-hit areas. Higher-paid workers likely disproportionately boosted the wage figure.

Still, the government on Friday revised wage gains in August — before the hurricanes hit — to a 2.7 percent annual rate, up from 2.5 percent. That suggests that pay could be picking up, even excluding the storms, and encouraging more people to look for work.

"The tighter labor market is pushing up wages and will keep pushing up wages into 2018," Faucher said.

Interview

there were good and bad Nazis?

KF: I have a tweet pinned to my refrigerator regarding leadership which I think can apply to many leaders which reads something like, "When do we stop looking for our leaders to change, rather than change leadership?"

KW: I know you were born in New York. Do you have any memories of the city before your family moved to Los Angeles?

KF: Yes. I grew up in Harlem, right across from St. Nicholas Park. The early part of my upcoming autobiography is devoted to my childhood in Harlem. And its subtitle is "From Harlem to Hollywood." I still have an affinity for Harlem and live there now. I moved back a decade or so ago. Harlem informs a great deal of who I am as a global citizen, as an artist and performer, and as a wannabe historian.

KW: Ling-Ju Yen asks: What is your earliest childhood memory?

KF: The black-and-white checkered tiles on the steps going up to my grandmother's apartment on St. Nicholas Avenue just before 145th Street, heading uptown. She was a dancer at the Savoy. She was part of Billy Eckstine's nightclub act. She was also one of Pearl Bailey's dancers. There's a rich history there.

KW: What is your favorite dish to cook?

KF: Lasagna.

KW: When you look in the mirror, what do you see?

KF: It depends on when I look. Right now, I'm camera-ready, so I look fabulous! [laughter]

KW: The Viola Davis question: What's the biggest difference between who you are at home as opposed to the person we see on the red carpet?

KF: Probably that I have some version of a Spanx on. [Laughs some more]

KW: If you could have one wish instantly granted, what would that be for?

KF: Social listening and peace.

KW: The Uduak Oduok question: Who is your favorite clothes designer?

KF: I'm a fan of Massimo. Let me be clear, the Massimo line in Target. [Laughs] And I'm always at The Gap. I love their jeans.

KW: Harriet Pakula-Teweles asks: With so many classic films being redone, is there a remake you'd like to star in?

KF: Oh my goodness! Suddenly, Last Summer.

KW: The Tavis Smiley question: How do you want to be remembered?

KF: I just don't want to be forgotten. That's a start! [Laughs heartily]

KW: Thanks again for the time, Kim, and I hope we can speak again when your autobiography comes out.

KF: Sounds like a plan, Kam. Thanks!
