State Seeks Applicants for Robert W. Straub Fellowships

State Treasurer Tobias Read announced Tuesday the creation of the Robert W. Straub Fellowships program, which seeks to attract exceptional talent to help Oregonians to be more financially secure.

The program is a new partnership between the Oregon State Treasury and Portland State University and includes two paid internships: a 10-week summer fellowship and an eight-month residency. Candidates are graduate business or government students - from Oregon or elsewhere - who have an interest in the nexus of financial business and public service.

Treasury is the state's financial hub and manages billions of dollars in investments, public bonding, banking and finance programs. About a quarter of the Treasury's staff including much of its senior leadership will be eligible to retire within the next five years.

The Treasurer was joined at the announcement by Keisling; Oregon Investment Council Chair Rukaiyah Adams, the chief investment officer at Meyer Memorial Trust; and Oregon Investment Council member Rex Kim, an investment manager at the Multnomah Group.

The new program is named after former Governor and Treasurer Robert W. Straub, a state finance pioneer who led the creation of the Oregon Investment Council in the 1960s.

Attendees included members of the Straub family, former state treasurers Jim Hill and Randall Edwards, and university students.

For more information, visit <http://www.oregon.gov/treasury/Pages/Straub-Fellowships.aspx>. The page includes a link to the fellowships program at Portland State, which will handle the application process. The summer program will pay a $6,000 stipend and the eight-month program will pay a $24,000 stipend.
