Interview

themes.

KW: How did you manage to craft such a convincing tale?

MB: Although I didn't go through the training to become a nun back in the '60s, and I'm not even religious, there's something universal about that coming-of-age moment that's no different in this movie than it would be for a young woman who goes off to college or for a year-long trip to a foreign country. It's the age when you're sort of figuring out who you are. That's what transpires in this movie, and it just happens to take place in the context of a convent.

KW: What message do you hope people will take away from the film?

MB: I really just want people to come away from the film thinking, "These are really complicated women." I wanted to present an alternative to the one-dimensional images of nuns presented in pop culture. What I learned from my research was that they're incredibly fascinating women leading complicated lives. There's a whole canon of films that, as soon as you see a nun in a habit, has you conjuring up an image of someone who's really holy, or really mean. In truth, they're dynamic women with a whole range of emotions and personas. I'll never look at nuns the same way again. And when you realize how tough their lives were, your admiration for their commitment to their faith becomes undying. I do hope that people who see the film feel a deep admiration for this lost community of women which is pretty much dying out now.

KW: I certainly have them to thank for my excellent education from kindergarten through eighth grade.

MB: We don't credit their academic achievements enough. But it was really nuns who, from the turn of the 20th Century, advanced the entire Catholic school system which, by the Fifties and Sixties, was the best private education you could get in this country. They were incredible educators and achievers. The parochial school system was pretty amazing.

KW: Patricia wants to know whether "Novitiate" will be presented at any more film festivals with cast members in attendance?

MB: I know that we're showing the picture in quite a number of film festivals and that I'm going to one in Poland, but I don't actually have the answer to that question. If you pay attention to Sony Pictures Classics' Facebook page and website, you'll get some answers. They update them pretty regularly.

JOIN THE FOREST SERVICE! AGENCY HIRING FOR 1,000+ SUMMER JOBS IN OREGON AND WASHINGTON

Portland, Ore. – The U.S. Forest Service will be accepting applications for over 1,000 seasonal spring and summer jobs in Oregon and Washington from Nov. 14 – 20, 2017. Positions are available in multiple fields, including fire, recreation, natural resources, timber, engineering, visitor services, and archaeology.

"Seasonal employment with the Forest Service is a great way to give back to communities, learn new skills, and perform meaningful work," said Regional Forester Jim Peña. "If you are interested in working with a dedicated team of people who take pride in managing our national forests, we encourage you to consider joining the Forest Service."

Applications must be submitted on www.USAJOBS.gov between Nov. 14 – 20, 2017. Interested applicants are encouraged to create a profile on USAJOBS now to save time once the hiring process begins.

Individuals interested in finding more information about a specific position should contact the National Forests where the position is hosted. Most current and upcoming Forest Service job opportunities across the nation can be found online at <https://fsoutreach.gdcii.com/Outreach>.

More information about temporary employment in the Forest Service's Pacific Northwest Region can be found at www.fs.usda.gov/main/r6/jobs.

The Forest Service is an equal opportunity employer. The mission of the Forest Service is to sustain the health, diversity, and productivity of the nation's forests and grasslands to meet the needs of present and future generations. The agency manages 193 million acres of public land, provides assistance to state and private landowners, and maintains the largest forestry research organization in the world.

The Pacific Northwest Region consists of 16 National Forests, 59 District Offices, a National Scenic Area, and a National Grassland comprising 24.7 million acres in Oregon and Washington and employing approximately 3,550 people.
