Seattle Searches for New Chief

Panelists Andre' Taylor, and Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan, participate in a community meeting and panel discussion March 14 at Seattle Vocational Institute, about what sort of person should be chosen to be Seattle's next police chief. The discussion which was co-hosted by Not This Time and The Public Defender Association was an opportunity for communities of color to voice their concerns and expectations of what they believe a police chief should represent. The Mayor's office is conducting an online survey and holding additional public meetings in an effort to find the best candidate. A 25-member search committee will produce a list of candidates for Mayor Durkan in May. The city intends to hire a new chief in June 2018.

King County Immigrant and Refugee Commission Seeks New Members

The King County Immigrant and Refugee Commission, designed to be the voice of King County's immigrant and refugee communities, is looking for commission members.

The application period for those interested in becoming commission members starts Monday, March 19 and closes on Friday, April 27.

The Immigrant and Refugee Commission, approved by the County Council and signed into law by the County Executive, will focus on integrating, strengthening and valuing immigrant and refugee communities and upholding the county's commitment as a welcoming community.

The mission of the Immigrant and Refugee Commission will include: achieving fair and equitable access to county services for immigrant and refugee communities, improving opportunities for civic engagement, setting annual goals, and participating in important dialogue on County policies and practices that impact the community.

The commission will have thirteen voting members and four nonvoting members for three-year terms, with the exception of the inaugural term members whose terms would be staggered into three, two, and one-year terms to ensure continuity of experienced members in the commission.

Individuals interested in applying to become a member of the Immigrant and Refugee Commission should go to <https://www.kingcounty.gov/irc>

City of Seattle Seeks Community Members to Serve on the Community Police Commission

Mayor Jenny A. Durkan, the City Council, and the Community Police Commission (CPC), are seeking additional members for the CPC. Initially established as a requirement of the Consent Decree, the City of Seattle established the Community Police Commission to make policy recommendations during reform and to serve as a conduit between SPD, the City, and the community.

In 2017 the City made the CPC permanent and expanded the number of commissioners from 15 to 21. The Mayor's Office, the CPC, and City Council are recruiting applicants to fill these newly created seats.

The CPC's mission is to listen to, amplify, and build common ground among communities affected by policing in Seattle. It champions policing practices centered in justice and equity. The Commission strives to recruit individuals from communities that are most affected by policing, and those who have a desire to integrate police practices with your community's values.

Applications will be accepted on a rolling basis. For consideration of appointments by all appointing entities by June 30, please submit your application by April 12, 2018 at OCPC@seattle.gov.

If you'd like to submit your application to a specific appointing entity, please submit to:

- Community Police Commission: Fe.Lopez@seattle.gov
- City Council: Thao.Madsen@seattle.gov
- Office of Mayor Jenny Durkan: Evan.Philip@seattle.gov

Mayor Jenny Durkan and Councilmember González Announce New Action on Safe Storage

Seattle Mayor Jenny A. Durkan, Seattle City Attorney Pete Holmes, and Councilmember M. Lorena González announced that they will be developing legislation within the next month to address gun violence in Seattle. Following outreach and engagement with stakeholders including gun owners, safety advocates, community members, public health experts and others, this legislation will require safe storage of firearms and increase civil penalties and legal responsibility for not reporting lost or stolen firearms, which is required within 24 hours.

Across the country, nearly 1,300 children die and 5,790 are treated for gunshot wounds each year. In 2015, an estimated 150,000 adults in King County reported keeping a firearm unlocked. In Seattle, 250 stolen guns were reported from burglaries and car prowls in 2017 according to Seattle Police Department.

In 2015, the Seattle City Council passed legislation to establish a tax on gun and ammunition sales to fund gun violence prevention research. Although the City Council continued funding gun violence prevention work at Harborview Injury Prevention & Research Center, the revenue was initially blocked due to ongoing litigation. With the tax upheld by the State Supreme Court, this proposal will invest 2018 revenue and future gun and ammo tax revenues in Harborview Injury Prevention & Research Center's work to help individuals with firearm injuries.

In 2013, Seattle became the first city in the nation to conduct basic research on gun safety. The City Council-funded research led to a report from The Harborview Injury Prevention and Research Center that established that "gun violence begets gun violence." The research found that individuals hospitalized for a firearm injury were 30 times more likely to be re-hospitalized for another firearm injury than people admitted to the hospital for non-firearm related injuries.

In addition, the City of Seattle and Seattle Police Department launched a new site, seattle.gov/ERPO, to ensure all Seattle residents can easily complete an Extreme Risk Protection Order (ERPO). An ERPO was designed to give family, household members, and law enforcement a way to petition the court to restrict the access and ability for a person with health crisis issues to purchase or possess firearms. In Seattle, 18 ERPOs have been petitioned by law enforcement with 37 weapons recovered.

"From Columbine to Newtown to Parkland, we are constantly reminded that Extreme Risk Protection Orders are more important than ever. These protection orders won't prevent every act of gun violence, but we know they are already making a difference," said Seattle Interim Police Chief Carmen Best.
