By Kam Williams
For The Skanner News

The election of Donald Trump has ostensibly served to embolden Ku Klux Klansmen, neo-Nazis and the rest of the alt-right movement, and it also seems to have given these social outcasts hope of moving into the mainstream. In fact, the American Renaissance Conference, an annual gathering of White supremacists, was suddenly so popular that organizers had to shut down registration weeks before the event was staged last July.

It was clear to the participants that the new President had sent out a signal that it's perfectly fine to be a racist. See ALT-RIGHT on page 7
