On Thursday, June 21, at the Eliot Center in Portland, De Paul Treatment Centers recognized CareOregon as one of two Community Partners of the year. CareOregon, a non-profit organization providing Medicaid managed health care plans to low-income Oregonians, has been key in supporting De Paul's mission of helping individuals, families and communities recover from a substance use addiction.

High Persistence of Racial Inequality Revealed in Washington County Report

A new report, 'Leading with Race,' examines the lived experiences of eight communities of color in an increasingly diverse county

The Skanner News

After two years of research, relationship building and committee organizing, the Research Justice Center of the Coalition of Communities of Color (CCC) has released its first in-house report, "Leading with Race: Research Justice in Washington County" — a 374-page document outlining the racial inequalities that people of color experience on a daily basis.

Although the CCC has worked primarily within

Portland for the past 12 years, due to rapid gentrification, it turned to neighboring Washington County for current data.

"We knew that people were being pushed out of the Portland metropolitan area, and so we were grappling with the question of, how do we keep connected to the racial justice movement outside of Portland, where many people of color are now living," Shweta Moorthy, researcher at CCC, told The Skanner.

In many ways, "Leading with Race" is a companion report to CCC's 2008 project, "An Unsettling Profile Research Series," which gathered community-based research on the realities of communities of color in Multnomah County.

"It had been a huge advocacy opportunity for culturally specific organizations and community members to really bust this myth that Portland is a color-blind, post-racial place — and to show the deep racial inequities that exist in the city," said Moorthy.

For "Leading the Race,"

CCC looked west to Washington County — home to the largest population of people of color in Oregon — and recruited a 12-member steering committee comprised of community members, jurisdictional partners, the nonprofit sector, and culturally specific organizations.

Home to Nike and Intel, Washington County is often perceived as Oregon's most economically prosperous. Yet the report shows a different narra-

MCALLEN, Texas — The clock is ticking for the Trump administration after a federal judge ordered thousands of migrant children and parents who were forcibly separated at the Mexican border reunited within 30 days, sooner for youngsters under 5.

The deadline was set Tuesday night by U.S. District Judge Dana Sabraw in San Diego after President Donald Trump's order ending his policy of separating families gave way to days of uncertainty, conflicting information and no word from the administration on when parents might see their children again.

"This situation has reached a crisis level," Sabraw wrote.

The ruling poses a host of logistical
