Besolved. A CURIOSITY.—Dan Jonos, the tailor, has a new cutting beard in his abop which, as well as boing an excellent article for its purpose, is a curlosity and a fine piece of workmanship. The board is made of oriental mahogany, with a borroder of yellow popilar, and is all smoothly polished. This mahogany was brought here in the form of boxes by Mr. Elwood, who was lately here with a collection of shells from the Oriental Islands. It is a very fine wood, differing from the Brazilian mahogany, some of the pieces resembling the bizek walmut in color, while others are like the white walmut or butternut. When this wood is nicely polished and put together in piecework, as in this board, allowing the colors to hit or miss, the result is a very pretty surface. This board was made by Mr. J. C. Hutton, of North Salem, and the work was so neatly done that, were it not for the different shades of color, it would be a hard matter to find the joints.

CARLESENTES.—It is a weakness with some persons to amathematise postmasters if they don't got their mail just when they think they ought to have it, and at such times the whole Postal system is a humbug, and a fraud upon the people—so one would think to hear the vituperations of one of these chronic croakers. Well, occasionally postmasters have quite a number of letters and papers to handle, and doubtless they sometimes make mistakes. But we saw in the frame at the Postoffice this morning an unaddressed letter, perhaps of not a little importance, and we could not help sympathising with the postmaster for the abnse he will probably get for not sending this letter along and returning a reply to it on quick time. The letter awaits a claimant.

Hoodhems at Dallass.—From the remarks of the Republican, we should judge that not a sermon or lecture can be delivered at Dallas without the meeting being disturbed by the rude and disorderly conduct of how and of they was a free to deliver a discourse for the line from their condition, would fatten upon almost nothing which in our estimation wou ing the fest market for their birth by percohlai regulations which refused relief or sesistance to the laborer outside of the parish in which he was born, had been content to sink, without effort to ameliorate their condition, into the most abject poverty; of which he gave some thrilling examples from the speeches of Mitchell and others at Exeter Hall. Awakened by the appeals of their aposite, Joseph Aich, to the importance of Independent, and abore all, of united action, he described the sudden and miraculous upristing of the so-long torpid sgrienitural laborer of England, the success of the movement, the sympathy and assistance it-veked from the other classes of England, the impossibility of its suppression, for, said ho, "yon cannot suppress the carthquake;" and concluded in a glowing perceation predicting the success of the laborer in the struggle, heralding other and still greater reforms in the lamb of our ancestors.

A Sap Picture. — Meeting Mr. R. H. Hawley on the street yesterday, he said if we would walk down to the river, where he has been for some time engaged removing a portion of the bank from near the W. R. T. Co.'s wavehouse, he would show us a human skelesien which he had found while working there. We ascordingly repaired to the spot, and there upon the bank, where he had placed them as he dug them out, were a number of bones which, beyond a doubt, had once belonged to a human being, but were now desayed and softened by having lain for years in the damp earth and exposed to the fieres section of the elements. A vision rose before our mind, and we saw, Jong years agene, when the trail of the savage red man threaded its winding course along our mountain sides, and his favorite haunts were on the banks of our beautiful river, a beardless youth and fair damsel in an Eastern home, lingering in the last fond embrace of a sorrowful parting; he to gain seek his fortune in the wild and unknown West, where to go was to be mourned almost as lost; she to wair and watels for him whose one ambition, to make her happy, had lured him from her side and seat him on his mission of flove, filled with bright hopes for the future when he should return to her laden with the rich harvest be had reaped in the land of his golden dreams. Many mouths had come and gone, the trials and hardships of the perilous goldrey series the plains had been met and passed, weeks which seemed like ages had been spent by the lonely girl looking longingly for love's first sweet message to tell of his safe sarrival. And then, upon the grassy bank of the basultiful Williamette we see the blacksoning corpse of the once harpy lover, slain, mayhap, by the relentless band of a savage foe. And when one or two of our rarriest settlers informed us that many years ago, when but few whites had over visited Oregon, an emigrant was drowned off the very point of land where in the man had been middless prown of the ray of light procuring value for his return to the lowest similal proof of their interest in his interesting lafors.

THAT PATITION.

To the Hon. County Court, for the State of Oregon, for the County of Marion:

The undersqueel, resident tax payers of said county, respectfully represent: that while we are not prepared to dony the public utility of such enterprises as the drainage of Lake Labish, and the exploration of the passes of the Casacde Range at the public expense, we think that such expensive enterprises ought to be delayed until the ladebtedness of the county can be liquidated, and the present burdensome tax levy reduced.

We therefore pray your Honorable court to reached the order for the survey of a road up the Santiam to the Casacde Mountains, and that all other ingenious achiemes for depleting the County Treasury may be discouraged.

The tomb of Petrarch has been lately oposed at Argus, in North Italy. The body was not in good preservation, but it was sufficiently shown that Petrarch was a robust man, with a head of medium size.
