DEATH OF A. B. COSPER.

One week ago last Sabbath morning, while the church bells were summoning our citizens to morning service, those who entered the Congregational Church were met and ushered in with a pleasant smile, and often a kind and affectionate word.

As the bells rang out their calls to worship on last Sabbath morning he was not there. For days he had lain upon a bed of suffering, and just as the church bells, that were never silent, ceased to call him to his voluntary duty, his spirit took its flight from suffering clay, passed the portals of time, and while those who loved him missed his greeting, his soul's trust and faith was rewarded by realization of the unspeakable joys of eternity.

Mr. Cosper was born July 18, 1822, and died in his 55th year. From early life he resided in Ohio, coming thence to Oregon in 1862, and since that year has made his home among us.

IN MEMORY OF A. B. COSPER. Last week we met him on the street, The genial friend of years before, His was the ready smile to greet, But we shall meet him here no more.

He lies beloved by weeping friends, In that sweet rest the good man knows, How oft in sharp and sudden ends The calmest lives have found a close!
