YAQUINA BAY.

Elk City is prettily situated on a flat just below the point where the Big Elk flows into the Yaquina and is almost at what may be called the head of Navigation.

TOLEDO is seen, a settlement on a side creek, and here, in the event of the Railroad passing by this route, there will no doubt be established a branch line to tap "the Siletz" country.

At last the Bay is reached and perched on a high bluff to the right the houses comprising Newport come in sight.

THE LIGHTHOUSE. From motives of (false) economy this beacon has now been discontinued and itsuddy gleam no longer greets the eye of the mariner.

On the left is Yaquina Bay, on the south side of which a low sandy beach stretches to where the A'sea flows into the ocean.

This is the great allied obstacle to the Bay to being a shipping port, but what are the real facts of the case? The bar are two well defined channels where the deep blue of the ocean shows plainly that deep water exists.

DELIGHTFUL EXCURSION. It was a remarkably pleasant morning, in fact, the first of Summer, when two excursionists seated in a buggy drawn by a strong black horse passed through the cavernous semi-obscure of the south bridge and emerged into the sunshine and fresh country air.

The State School Superintendent, Dr. L. L. Rowland, was the one, and "Yours Truly" the other, the objective point of their journey was "The Prospect Hill School."

NEAREST GARB. And Oregon shows to the best advantage. Having never traveled this highway before, Dr. Rowland was not quite certain of the proper road, but he was relieved of his dilemma shortly after passing the Catholic burying grounds, by very opportunely encountering a polite young man who, on being accosted, informed us that he lived near the Hill school house and gave such minute directions as to the road that we could not easily go astray.

Traveling on through those lovely oak-clad hills and green pastures we gradually ascended, and the landscape opened out on every side, shifting in its features each moment like some moving panorama of beauty.

We had proceeded about the distance which we had been told we must travel when the Doctor's attention was attracted by a man who was extracting oak grubs and so descending from his buggy he viewed the operation and conversed with the farmer.

COUNTRY SCHOOL HOUSE, Which stood at a little distance surrounded and half hidden by oak groves.

The children were first dismissed for their dinner-hour, and so Dr. Rowland informed the young lady (Miss Lucy Fullerton) who ruled over them that he would go up on Prospect Hill, and return in about an hour.

No wonder that this is called PROSPECT HILL, and that numbers of people come from a distance to admire it.

Is a neat, well-finished house standing on a gentle acclivity and almost in the center of a ten-acre farm which was deeded to this charitable institution by the late Mrs. J. L. Farhish.

WONDERFUL LANDSCAPE. But away to the east and northeast the view is, if possible, more magnificent, away stretch for miles fertile fields of grain.

THE SUPERINTENDENT. The Superintendent in the course of his remarks laid particular stress on the importance of retaining as long as possible the services of one competent teacher.

Don't go to the Black Hills to get rich. It is far easier to organize a life insurance company and pay yourself a salary of $30,000 per year.

F. A. Smith, Artist, Salem, Oregon, dealer in Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views, and Scenes of Salem and the surrounding country.

Unsolicited Testimony. Fairfield, Me., April 28, 1864. Gentlemen—Seeing numerous certificates in the Maine Farmer, endorsing the merits of the Great Lung Remedy.

The Pelton Separator. Yesterday the following proof of the superiority of the Pelton Separator was exhibited at the barn of Mr. Rosekrantz in North Salem.

By a letter from Rev. A. J. Hunsaker we learn that the Baptist Sabbath School Convention for this State will meet in Albany on Monday, June 25, and will probably hold for three days.

THE ABOVE STATEMENT, gentlemen, is my voluntary offering to you in favor of your disposal. As ever, yours, ANDREW ARCHER.

A BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

Your correspondent plunged in a deep reverie, was gazing at sundry old tan v's and charred pieces of timber close by the bridge which spans North Mill Creek when he was startled by the sudden apparition of a very small, red-checked, black-eyed boy, carrying a small tin dinner-pail.

The apparition was dressed in a dark suit and wore knickerbockers, striped stockings, and a little straw hat. This small traveler was very free and easy in his demeanor and promptly informed the writer that "he was five years old, had come from Astoria and had just been to school (where he hadn't been whipped)."

Is a neat, well-finished house standing on a gentle acclivity and almost in the center of a ten-acre farm which was deeded to this charitable institution by the late Mrs. J. L. Farhish.
