Resolved, That while we mourn her death we feel that our loss is to her eternal gain from the evidences left behind her.

Tues., 22.—We are camped upon a branch of Green River called Ham's Fork. I learn this morning that it is considerable of a stream, although it is very had camping on account of grass.

Wed., 23.—Went about 10 miles today, over one more mountain, coming down upon Bear River and camping on it. This river is one of the streams which empty into the Great Salt Lake.

Thurs., 24.—This morning is showery, and it is the first rain we have had for many weeks. Went about 15 miles to-day, keeping down the river bottom and crossing the river once.

Fri., 25.—Went about 16 miles today, crossing the river again and climbing over a mountain which shuts in to the river's edge.

Sat., 26.—Owing to an injudicious selection of our camp last night we did not get away from it until 11 o'clock, so that we only went seven miles to-day. There was an almost impenetrable thicket of brush near our camp, from which it seemed impossible to get the cattle.

Sun., 27.—Went about 22 miles today, camping near the soda springs. These springs are in the river valley on its northern side, and are one of the greatest curiosities on the road.

Mon., 28.—Went about ten miles to-day, leaving Bear River on our left and camping near a spring slightly impregnated with soda. About a mile from camp we passed a spring, the water of which tasted more like soda water than any I have tasted of.

Tues., 29.—One natural production of the country ought to be noticed, as it constitutes an important item of the food of the natives, game being rather scarce here. This is the crickets, which in some parts of the valley are larger and more plentiful than I ever saw them anywhere else.
