It is highly desirable that the wool grower should know the important points about a profitable fibre, so as to breed towards uniformity, and gradually improve the character of his flock. If we consider the needed qualities in a good merino combing wool, we shall find then nearly the same the world over. These essentials to a profitable and high-priced article are about as follows: Fineness of fibre; length of fibre; softness of fibre bre. The best fibre as regards the first requirement named, measures under the microscope but 1-1227th of an inch in diameter, when unwashed, and 1-1405th of an inch when washed. The fibre should be from 21 to 31 in ches in length. The elasticity and soft-ness should be great. Clothes made of poor, non-elastic wool soon get out of shape. Combing wools should separate like a skein of silk, so that there is less waste in manufacture. The color should be bright, clear and lustrous, but light, so as to receive the most delicate dyes The very best wools will take dyes as well as silk does. If a wool-grower proposes to produce these best grades of wool, he must keep his flock in a region free from burrs and thorns and clinging seeds. Annoying insects such as ticks, if numerous, irritate the animals, and destroy the silkiness of the wool. The use of a good sheep dip prevents this trouble. Keeping sheep in too dry a region, injures the yolk of the wool. The yolk is a soap like material which is produced by glands to nourish the wool. It is composed of animal oils and potash. The finest wools contain the greatest percentage of this substance. It is the best known substance for washing or scouring wools. Wool of Southdown and Leicestershire sheep contains twenty per cent yolk; the best merino fleeces contain from forty to seventy five per cent in weight of this substance.

Henry Stafford Northcote, member of par liament, who recently returned from America, addressing his constituency at Exeter said he did not believe in a decrease of American competition in the food market. It was, he said, idle to to talk of the exhaustion of American lands. The supply of land for many years to come in the great Northwest will be boundless.

The three men hanged by the vigilantes of Seattle were James Sullivan, a one-armed man, Wm. Hoovard and Benj. Payne. The two former were charged with highway robbery and killing Geo. B. The officer in charge of Payne also showed "good grit" and refused to surrender him, whereupon the mob broke down the doors and took him.
