News from the Jeannette. Boston, March 20.—The father of S. P. Noras has received a letter from his son, dated Yakutat, Siberia, January 7th. Noras was one of the men selected by Lieutenant DeLong to go ahead for relief. In the letter he says: "We traveled about two weeks short of provisions, and then the captain decided to send Ninderman and myself ahead to look for assistance. We walked 120 miles without anything to eat for six days. We had not a mouthful of food and were most starved when found by natives. The captain and ten men have, I fear, died from starvation and cold."

CHICAGO, March 20.—W. E. Dickson, of this city, started for Washington to-night with a petition for the pardon of Sergeant Mason. The petition is 2400 feet long, and is said to contain 120,000 names. It is elaborately gotten up, and required two expert paper-langers two hours to fold it properly. The Tribune's Sergeant Mason fund amounts to $320.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—Despite the Sunday law all the saloons in the city were open as usual yesterday. A number of grocery stores, bootblack stands and news stands were closed. No attempt was made by police to arrest violators. Officers confined themselves solely to collecting evidence. Dispatches have been received from 37 interior towns of the State in reference to the observance of the Sunday law. No attention was paid to the law except in 12 places out of the 37.

BOZEMAN, March 20.—Wednesday night a snowdrift in Lake canyon buried several men, four of whom—Robert Trumbull, Alex. McKoon and D. B. Grant, miners, and Henry Schumaker, engineer—were killed. The bodies were recovered, but a second slide buried them under forty feet of snow. Over forty slides occurred in Lake and Mill creek canyons between Wednesday and Saturday, burying in all thirty-eight persons. With the exception of the above named, the only one seriously injured is Christian Hobbitt, who was buried for nineteen hours and is likely to die from injuries.

LYNCH LAW.

Langdon, the Murderer of Crooks and Jory, Shot, and Harrison, Suspected of Being an Accomplice, Hanged by a Mob at Prineville.

The murder of A. H. Crooks and his son-in-law, S. J. Jory, by Lucien Langdon, at Big Willow Creek, Wasco county, on Wednesday last, has culminated in a most shocking display of mob vengeance. As soon as the news of the murder was received at Prineville, a posse started out to capture the perpetrators. They succeeded in securing the horse and rifle of Langdon on Wednesday evening. On Thursday evening he returned to his house to change his clothing, and as he was leaving he was surrounded by men armed with Winchester rifles, and compelled to surrender. Langdon and his wife both begged that he might be guarded from mob violence, which his captors promised. He was taken to Prineville and placed under guard in the Jackson House, where he laid down on a lounge in the corner of a room and went to sleep. Our correspondent at Prineville furnishes the following account of the subsequent proceedings. In the mean time,

A MASKED MOB Assembled at the ringing of the school bell, and at about 5 o'clock in the morning, broke into the hotel, overpowered the guards, and one of the men struck Langdon two blows over the head with a six-shooter, after which he fired five shots at Langdon, three of which took effect, death resulting instantly. And just to show the marked coolness of the man who did the shooting, it is enough to say that after he had done the shooting, he stepped back a step or two and waited some time to see if his work was complete. Nor was this the end of this fatal affair. A young man by the name of W. H. Harrison who had been around Langdon's for some time conducted himself so shamefully at the inquest of Crooks and Jory, that it was thought he must have been implicated in the murder in some way, for he remarked that "that was the way to pile them up," and that "he knew

THEY WOULD GET IT Before long." This had so enraged the people that after finishing Langdon they seized Harrison and hustled him off to the bridge on Crooked river. He made some slight resistance and begged lustily for mercy saying "Give me a chance for my life!" and "I know nothing of the affair." But his cries only hastened him into eternity, as he was felled to the ground by a blow from some one and dragged to the bridge by the neck where he was found suspended to a beam this morning. By this awful affair three homes are made desolate and three widows and their children are left to mourn the loss of husbands and fathers. The Prineville News gives the following account of the murder: It appears that one L. Langdon had had some difficulty about a piece of disputed land with two men living near him by the name of Crooks and Jory. Langdon went to these men and compromised matters with them, and the three run the lines in an apparently satisfactory manner. This was done in the morning, and Langdon told Crooks and Jory that the business was then settled. Crooks and his son-in-law (Jory) then went to work on the disputed land, cutting wood. While they were gone to dinner Langdon went to where they had been at work and waited for them to return. When the men came from their dinner, Langdon met them at their work, and without any provocation shot and killed them both. Mr. Crooks was shot in the right shoulder and breast, the shot passing through his lungs, and killing him almost instantly. Jory was shot in the face, eleven buckshot entering there, and three penetrating the brain. The wives of the murdered men were looking on at a distance of a quarter of a mile, and saw the whole affair.

Word was soon brought to town, telling of the murder, and Justice Powers, acting as coroner, and accompanied by several citizens, repaired to the place where the killing was done, and found the bodies just as they had fallen when shot. No one had gone to the bodies except their wives, who had approached and placed their aprons over the heads of the dead. A jury was impeached who returned a verdict that Crooks and Jory came to their death by gunshot wounds inflicted by Lucas Langdon.

From the following concerning Harrison, it would appear as if he was not altogether innocent. At about five o'clock in the morning a band (number not known) of armed and masked men entered the hotel, instantly overpowering the officers. Langdon was called, and upon being aroused, was riddled with bullets instantly. Harrison was seized, taken from the hotel, gagged, haltered and dragged to the Crooked river bridge, a distance of perhaps a quarter of a mile, and his body hung to the timbers of the bridge, where it was found in the morning. Harrison admitted being implicated in the murder of Crooks and Jory. Upon hearing that Langdon had succeeded in killing both men, he (Harrison) was heard to exclaim "Bully for us! Big job!" and he laid "em out just about right." And these remarks were repeated before several, in the presence of the dead, and in hearing of the wails of the poor widows and children of the murdered men.

It appears that after Langdon got his fright on Mill Creek on Wednesday night, that he succeeded in footing it back to his home, a distance of probably 15 miles, intending to secure another horse and gun. As good fortune had it the company who went to arrest Harrison, intercepted him just as he was leaving his home. He met the boys and was in their midst before he knew it. He very readily surrendered at the muzzle of the Winchester and was captured with the above result.

THE INQUEST. At 11 o'clock Wednesday, Justice Powers, acting as coroner, held inquests on the remains of the two men found dead, and the following verdicts were returned: We, the jury empaneled at the inquest held on the body of a man found dead at the Jackson House on March 17, 1882, find that the name of the deceased is Lucien Langdon, and that he came to his death at the hands of a party of men unknown, by being shot with a pistol. Gu. Winkler, J. Sommersville, W. C. Foren, J. M. Colver, J. M. Blakely, J. W. Howard.

We, the jury empaneled at the inquest held on the body found hanging beneath the Crooked River bridge, on March 17, 1882, find that the name of the deceased is W. H. Harrison, and that he came to his death at the hands of a party of men unknown, by being hanged by the neck until he was dead. R. H. Volzath, L. B. Nicholas, J. A. Blakely, S. T. Richardson, W. R. Pollard, T. M. Baldwin.

AND STILL THEY COME.—The number of divorces applied for this month bids fair to exceed the number of marriage licenses issued. Scarcely a day passes but what some couple, who are "married but not mated," make application to be restored to a state of single blessedness. The applicant yesterday was Mrs. Mary Shields, who wishes a divorce from Thomas Shields. In view of the great number of mistakes which appear to have been made in choosing partners, intending couples will do well to look before they leap.

THE LINKVILLE TRAGEDY.

Deputy Sheriff Lewis Killed by a Mob Who Attempted to Take a Prisoner from His Custody to Lynch Him.

The following account of the terrible tragedy at Greenman's Hotel, Linkville, which resulted in the death of a deputy sheriff at the hands of a mob who were attempting to take H. C. Laws from his custody for the purpose of lynching him, we copy from the Ashland Tidings. At the inquest held upon the body of S. Lewis, C. S. Moore testified as follows: I was sitting in the hotel barroom, or office, about 10 o'clock, was sitting near the door. I heard an order given outside to halt. Wm. Wright, J. P., stepped to the door and opened it. Some one outside ordered him to go back and shut the door, which he did. Just afterward the door opened and from eight to ten men came in with guns cocked. The leader said, "very man you sit still!" Just then Deputy Sheriff Lewis came into the room from the hall. When the order was given to sit down he knelt on one knee at the corner of the telegraph office. The leader then said, "where is the prisoner? where is the constable? he has to go to Lookout." Mr. Wright, J. P., then spoke, and being asked who he was, said, "I am justice of the peace of this precinct. I warn you to desist." The leader again asked him where the prisoner was, and said he had 40 to go to Lookout. Mr. Wright then replied that the prisoner was under strong guard and would be dealt with according to law. The leader said, "yes, you will deal with him like you do here." Mr. Wright said he believed he had generally done his duty. The leader again demanded the constable, and put the muzzle of the gun in my face. I said "I do not know where he is. He is not here." The leader then crossed the room, took a lighted candle from the wall and tried to pass into the adjoining barroom. He was told there was no one there. Then he held the candle to Ed. Reed, saying, "Here, carry this candle and you shall not be hurt." Reed declined and the leader, carrying the light, moved toward the door of the hall, bidding his followers to move up. He opened the hall door and started in. Mr. Greenman said, "I warn you not to go in there." As he stood on the threshold, someone fired a shot from the direction of the stairway. The candle was extinguished. From the noise I thought someone fell in the hall. The leader said, "That's all right boys, stand your ground." The mob closed up toward the hall door. Just then another shot was fired, which I think was the one that killed Mr. Lewis. Another shot was fired almost instantly. The mob then retreated rapidly, as did also the other inmates of the room, until only three or four were left. By this time all the lights in the room were out. After being shot, Mr. Lewis rose up, holding his thigh with both hands. He said, "Oh! oh! three or four times while standing, and then, losing hold of his thigh, he fell upon the floor, and I heard the gush of blood. We hastened to his assistance with a light, but in five minutes he was dead. The shot that killed him seemed to come from the midst of the mob. The weapon was a gun loaded with four bullets and held so close that it set his clothing on fire around the wound. The leader of the mob was a tall man, rather slender, with sandy complexion, light beard, three or four inches long on his chin, was 35 or 40 years old, had a falsetto voice, wore a slouch hat, was slightly disguised by blacking the face, as were the others. I knew none of the crowd. Two guns were left in the room by the mob—one barrel of each had recently been discharged.

The cause of the sudden death of Officer Lewis from the wound was the severing of the femoral artery, from which the blood spouted in a torrent. The persons in the office of the hotel at the time the mob entered were: W. C. Greenman, W. A. Wright, J. P. Samuel, J. Lewis (deputy sheriff), Charles S. Moore, Henry Striplin, Charles Slade, E. C. Brooks, Ed. Reed and Mr. Sutliff, telegraph operator, nearly all of whom were unarmed. The deputy sheriff was killed without any excuse whatever. He sat down, as did the rest, when ordered by the leader of the mob, and was still sitting when shot. Justice Wright, and some others went out a window, and was shot in the muscle of the left arm after he was outside of the hotel. It is believed that one of the party of lynchers was badly wounded by the shot fired in the hall of the hotel, but nothing positive is known concerning it, except that blood was found, indicating that one of the lynchers was hurt.

The excitement of Linkville is great, and efforts will be made to discover the participants in the mob. It is reported that two young men of Alkali valley have been arrested of being connected with the attempted lynching.

The examination of H. C. Laws was first arranged to take place at Linkville last Monday, but, in consequence of the last tragedy, it was postponed, and it is not yet fairly begun. Col. C. A. Cogswell, of Lakeview, will appear as counsel for Laws, wear out.

THE O. & C. R. R. Extension.

The work of construction on the extension of the O. & C. R. R. Co's road to California is being pushed forward with vigor. Nearly 900 Chinese laborers, says the Jacksonville Sentinel, are at work, some on grading as far south as the Robert's hill. Two tunnels have been located, one through the Cow creek hill 2,800 feet in length, and the second through the Grave creek divide below where it is crossed by the present stage road, and 3,300 feet long and approached by an open cut 1,000 feet long. Bids for construction of both these tunnels were to have been opened on Thursday, and it is thought they will not be finished before next Spring.

This should be the case, the road will not be finished further south than Cow creek this year. It is thought that trains will be running to Myrtle creek by the middle of August. The saw mill on Myrtle creek is now running and at work on timbers for the two bridges at that point. Much change has been made in the line of the road for Grave creek and it is possible that when the country is examined, a detour may be made that will take the road through the "Pleasant" creek divide and bring it to Rogue river at the mouth of Evans creek. This is more conjecture, however, and only to be determined by the survey. During April, when the weather settles it is expected that there will be a force of several thousand men put to work and lively times along the line may be looked for. Comstock & Miller have purchased a steam pile driver which will be at work along the line of the railroad extension in a few days.

DIED.—Mr. Isaac Mitchell, one of the pioneers of the State, who settled in Marion county in 1849, and has been engaged in mercantile business there for 33 years, died suddenly at his residence at St. Louis on Sunday night of congestion of the lungs, aged 65 years. His remains were brought to this city yesterday and interred in the Jewish cemetery.

Consumption Cured.

Since 1870 Dr. Sherar has each year sent from this office the means of relief and cure to thousands afflicted with disease. The correspondence necessitated by this work becoming too heavy for him, I came to his aid. He now feels constrained to relinquish it entirely, and has placed in my hands the formula of that simple vegetable remedy discovered by an East India missionary, and found so effective for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Diseases; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Its remarkable curative powers have been proven in many thousand cases, and actuated by the desire to relieve suffering humanity, I gladly assume the duty of making it known to others. Address me, with stamp, naming the paper and I will mail you, free of charge, this recipe of this wonderful remedy, with full directions for its preparation and use, printed in German, French or English.
