BEN. BUTLER AND THE GRANCE

The dispatches informed us that Gen. Butler lately attended and addressed an immense concourse of farmers in Pennsylvania where he was formally received and welcomed by the Master of the State Grange and thousands of Patrons and addressed them on the subject of agriculture and its oppressions. Butler is a remarkable man who may be called a demagogue but who has always stood by and with the laboring classes against rich men and corporations. He is running as the Greenback, Labor and Workingmen's candidate for President and will poll a large vote in many of the Eastern States. It is the most formidable effort yet made to create a new political party, and if such a thing is possible Ben Butler is the man to give it life and success. The Anti-Monopolists also nominate Butler and he stands squarely with them. The New York Sun, which has the largest circulation in America stee of all newspapers, supports Butler, and a vigorous campaign is being made. The old man is a lion yet and though his bald head has seen many frosty seasons he seems to combine the vigor of prime manhood with the experience of three score years and ten.

Character is usually made up of small matters. It is true, there may be dominant traits that repress by their force all else, but even then if careful analysis could be made other traits would appear, and they will have their influence notwithstanding repression that is never wholly complete. Since it is true that small matters enter into character to mould it into recognizable shape, it is a matter of great moment that these small traits, impulses, aspirations and motives be carefully guarded with the purpose of eliminating all that is bad, and so making character worthy. There are men who make promises freely, their impulses at the time being good, but evil traits subsequently override what is good, and such men become objects of suspicion, men whose word is not a safe dependence. There are a thousand ways in which all that is good in human character may be repressed or utterly crushed out, when effort to nourish and support every good intention would make life wholly different. One of the best elements of character is truth, clean and unmixed, for it has no affinity for what is evil. Hence the requirement that promises be held as sacred obligations. Of course, this remark cannot apply to evil designs, because they are in themselves untrue, and a promise to do wrong is always a lie against the right. Moreover it is pernicious in its influence upon the mind, for it blunts the moral sense and so degrades character. Above all things, mind and heart should be kept free from evil impulses, even from thought, for these are the little things that insensibly lower conception of the right and ultimately obscure all that is good.

When the good Patron dispenses charity he is admonished to do it with becoming modesty. It is of such acts that Patrons should preserve discreet silence, remembering the injunction, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right doeth." But there is something left for the wise persons to understand without speech. The Patron should so comport himself as to leave the probable inference that he has pleasure in performing charitable deeds. How many may be found of whom such an inference would do violence to imagination,-whose worship has self for its object, and feelings of kindness have no place in their heart, -if indeed they have hearts. It is a pity that poor human nature should ever become so cold and unresponsive that appeals for charity." It may not be in gifts easily measured, for there may be acts a thousand times more cheering to persons benefited by them. Kind words sometimes have the sweetest flavor of genuine charity when they come from good hearts. As a man thinketh so is he, therefore when he thinketh evil constantly he is evil, and charity hath no abiding place with him.

Fever and Ague, Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, &c.

This class of diseases so common in all parts of the World, and especially prevalent in malarious districts and vicinage of water-courses, are almost invariably accompanied by more or less derangement of the liver, and frequently by a defective action of the digestive organs. The mere breaking of the Chill is but a step towards completing a radical cure; the various organs of the body, especially the stomach and liver, must be brought to a healthy and vigurous condition before a permanent cure can be established, and this fact has been specially kept in view by Dr. Jayne in his treatment of these complaints. The use of Jayne's Ague Mixture, in conjunction with Jayne's Sanative Pills, as prescribed in the Directions which accompany each bottle, will not only but restore the system, more particularly the liver and stomach, to a sound condition, and so prevent a relapse of Pever and Ague by ther-and the best evidence of this is the invariable success which has always followed the noministration of these remoties, as attested by the certificates published annually in Dr. Jayne's Almanae, and the wide-spread popularity of the Ague Mixture in those districts of the United States, where the diseases, for which it is saapted, most prevnil.
