Roads to Romance

with Jack and Ethyl

Being the personal letters of a young wife on her honeymoon over the Pacific Coast to the girl-friend back home.

Dear Marion and Jim:

Well, this is certainly delightful up here in the northwest. No wonder that the world was amazed when news of the Lewis and Clark expedition got around and people of a mountain, along a stream, or beside a lake or deep in the cool forest, I'm surprised that there aren't thousands of motorists on the roads instead of hundreds.

Everywhere you go you run upon locations that are just brimming over with romantic history. They tell you first about the desperate stand that he Indians up here made against the invading whites and you can just picture the desperation the poor savages had in battling for what was their entire world. Here they had lived for centuries, I suppose, with plenty to eat, a mild climate and every advantage that they could wish for and along came a band of white men and tried to civilize them. No wonder they got desperate and fought hard for their home-land.

Jack and I and Mr. Cook of the Associated Oil Company drove the Columbia River Highway and Mt. Hood Loop trip the other day. I suppose there isn't a more entrancing motor trip anywhere in the world than that is. We did it in one day but you can spend weeks along the way and still never get tired of it. In fact we saw several camping parties that were spending their entire vacation time along the Columbia River and one man told Jack that he had been doing it every summer for four years and he didn't ask for anything better. Right outside of Portland it starts and there you are right in the midst of natural beauty that is just over-whelming.

We're working north all the time and I expect that we will visit Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane and the other interesting cities up here before going back south. They have promised us a mountain clime over a glacier, a swim in Lake Washington, a motor-boat trip on Lake Chelan and a hundred and one other things so I should have plently to write you about.

And I'll write you again soon.

Love ETHYL

P. S. A traffic cop up here gave us a laugh yesterday. He stopped us for speeding and when Jack told him we were "Jack and Ethyl of the Associated Oil" he said--"O yes, and did you know that I am Lindberg?" Let us go, though.

Springtime Fruits

SPRINGTIME fruits? Why, fruits don't grow in spring! No, they don't, but they can be obtained in spring just the same, by going down to the grocery store and choosing them for yourself. And what will you have — peaches, pears, plums, apricots? Take your choice. They are all there, the red fruits in the gold enamel lined cans which preserve their color.

New Fruit Dishes

These fruits all have a perfection that goes with the bright spring, for they were picked at the moment of ripeness and canned within a few hours. In that way the housewife can pick out just the grade she desires, knowing that she can economically secure the highest quality.

Marshmallow Fruit Jelly: Drain syrup from a can of apricots, add to it two tablespoons lemon juice and eight quartered marshmallows and heat until melted. Meanwhile soften two teaspoons gelatin in two tablespoons cold water, then dissolve it in the hot syrup. When cool and beginning to set, beat to a froth. Arrange the fruit in a wet mold and pour over it the marshmallow mixture. Chill and garnish with whipped cream.

Ginger Cocktail: Mix one number 1 can of sliced peaches and one cup diced canned pineapple, and arrange in glasses. Place peeled sections of three oranges around edges of glass. Decorate top with Maraschino cherries. Sprinkle one tablespoon of candied ginger over the top, and, just before serving, pour over it one-half cup of cold ginger al-
