ACING bitter cold, Washington bade farewell to Fort Le Boeuf. On December 16 he set out with his aides in birch bark canoes to return to their horses at Venango, where they arrived shortly, encased in ice. Remounting, they were soon forced by deep snow to proceed on foot. Once they lost their way and an Indian, pressed into service as guide, fired on Washington. For this the Indian was seized, disarmed and sent on his way.

WHEN the treacherous Indian had disappeared, Washington pressed on in great fatigue through heavy snow and across ice-filled streams. At one place he fell from a hastily improvised raft, but was quickly rescued by his companion, Gist. At another—now the site of Pittsburgh's airport—he won the favor of Aliquippa, an Indian queen, by presenting her with a jug of rum. He reached Williamsburg on January 16, 1754 with "no more appetite for adventure."
