Smallest Man in West Visits Crater Lake Park

Crater Lake National Park, Aug., 7—Claimed to be the smallest man in the west, Major Alonzo Arthur, hardly 40 inches tall, was a visitor at Crater Lake this week. Tiring of circus life which had taken him to all parts of Europe, Asia, and other parts of the world, Major Arthur, a son of Hungarian prairies, has undertaken a tour of National Parks throughout the length of the Pacific coast to see scenic beauty rather than be seen.

"I have always realized I've been small," the Major said with a bit of foreign accent, "but to view Crater Lake and realize how large it really is, impresses me with the smallness of all mankind in comparison."

Major Arthur, in giving up circus life, has taken up music seriously and after viewing other parks, plans to make his home in southern Oregon.
