A SERIOUS GAME OF MAKE BELIEVE—Little Rita Sandall, aged three, makes a charming "bride." Her "groom" is Julia Warren, aged six, and for a little girl makes a perfect gentleman.

Gone are household troubles caused by frayed wires, broken plugs, short circuits and other wire defects that force electric appliances into idleness. Famed songstress, Countess Olga Albani, has equipped her home with the new approved electrical cords soldered to soft rubber plugs made by Belden. Engineers call the wire troubles "cordtis."

ROLLED OVER AT SIXTY MILES AN HOUR—The camera clicked at a critical moment as "Lucky" Teter, daredevil driver, subjected the 1936 Plymouth to a final series of hair-raising tests in Detroit. This first photo of the new Plymouth shows all four wheels off the ground as Teter rolls the car over and over. Teter drove the car away, undamaged, upon completion of the roll. A new type girder steel frame and safety-steel body enable the car to withstand such punishment.

Here is a model of a MODEL valve. This huge replica of the new type Hoffman radiator valve is built on a scale to vent a gigantic house, the size of the Empire State building. Like its comparatively tiny brother its port may be adjusted to various sizes in order to balance any particular heating system.

VIENNESE BEAUTY—We've all heard about the gorgeous artists' models of Vienna. Here's looking at one of the best!

Lumber Journal Tells of Mill Improvements

(Editor's Note: This article is reprinted from The Timberman, an international lumber journal, Portland, Oregon and San Francisco, California, issue of October, 1935.)

Two modern kilns of Moore's reversible cross circulation design have been completed at Ingham Lumber Co.'s plant, Glendale, Oregon. The buildings are of latest design of laminated wood construction and enjoy a low insurance rate. It is said that wood kiln buildings of this type of construction are about as near fire-proof as if built of concrete, brick or tile. The Ingham Lumber Co. will use the new kilns principally for drying California sugar pine and fir. The kilns are 12 feet wide by 104 feet long and economically constructed, with the fan and heating system located overhead and tracks on the ground. These kilns employ a single longitudinal shaft fan system for each kiln. Highest quality of drying is assured due to the stock being seasoned on low temperatures and controlled humidities, with a large volume of air circulation, which is reversed periodically during the drying process.

The plant was formerly Glendale Lumber Co. The mill is electrical throughout, with single shift capacity of tairty million feet annually. Addition of kilns makes it possible to take care of mixed car trade in addition to high grade dimension. Along with kiln dried uppers in fir, pine boards and other pine items can be furnished in same car, also timbers up to 40 feet. The grade of sugar pine in this district is very good, coming from the higher altitudes. Sheds are being built that will make dry lumber available in all seasons.

S. K. Ingham, father of C. W. Ingham, lives in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and is also interested in several retail yards in that region. He spends a large part of the summer on the Pacific Coast each year. C. W. Ingham, president of Ingham Lumber Co., suuccessfully operated a pine mill at Eutaw, Alabama, before coming to Oregon three years ago. Mr. Neilson is superintendent of Ingham Lumber Co. and B. E. Mouchett is in charge of operation of the new dry kilns.
