Saginaw, Michigan.

Morris Waite in Duck. Were you ever in Saginaw? Naw. Saginaw is close by East Saginaw, on the Saginaw river, which flows a few miles through Saginaw county, and empties into Saginaw bay.

Saginaw is one mile's ride from Mackinaw. There is so much ice and snow on Saginaw bay in winter that, to look out on it, makes one think he is at Nord Kyn on the Laxe Fjord, in Norway, and makes him feel like a Saginawegian.

In the city of Saginaw, however, you will find a civilization, with a capital C. The wealthy people of Saginaw made their money in planing-mills, and we might say, therefore, that they are just plane people.

A man in Saginaw is measured by the foot, or rather by the feet; he is rated according to the number of millions of feet of lumber he is getting out.

Saginaw is a big city, with electric lights, and has the finest opera house in Michigan, so they say, and when the best people (the ones who control the greatest number of buzz-saws) get up a grand ball they make things hum. The gentlemen take off their leggins and Arctic overshoes and put on full-dress suits, and the ladies come out in decollete gowns, just as they do in New York, N. Y., or any other big city; and they do say that these ladies will dance and dance until they get warm, and then the sawdust floating in the air alights on their fair shoulders and stays there—for none of them you ever saw dusted it off.

They play the sawdust game for all it is worth in Saginaw. The streets are paved with sawdust. Your water pitcher at the big hotel is filled with a tremendous mass of sawdust; you wash in sawdust; you drink sawdust. But Saginaw is a five town all the same, and I am sure you would like to live in Saginaw. Naw?
